

Draft to Lord Melbourne
Queen's House April 7th 1792 ^{on} P.M.

4639

There cannot be any objection to my directing Lord Rockingham to have stated on Paper the Alterations he proposes in the Household-Wardrobe and other Court Departments after he has consulted the Persons most experienced in those Services, with a View of the expense saved and other Advantages expected for these are interior, not public Regulations.

Nothing could be more proper than Lord Melbourne's Language on Monday in the House of Lords, and in reading the Account of it in the News Papers yesterday and that of the Gentlemen in the House of Commons on the same Subject, I felt very strongly by the great Difference.

The Letter to Mr. Oswald is very proper. I cannot say much in favour of that from Mr. Walpole, and one cannot help smiling however Man feels different for his own case from that of others; he certainly would blame Ministry for meddling in the interior Management of the Banks, but where it could be for his own personal Advantage, he mentions it so slightly that I dare say it is some very unreasonable request; I cannot conceive why he now wishes a continuation of the War who during the former Administration called out so much for Peace. I will very readily appoint Lord Cholmondeley to the Vacancy in my Bedchamber

Queen's House
April 7th 1792 ^{on} P.M.

[Faint, illegible handwritten text on lined paper]