

Ld. Rockingham

4705

Given under the Great Seal
Monday Night the 29th 1782
12th / lat.

Lord Rockingham humbly acquaints Your Majesty, that in consequence of Your Majesty's Directions, Lord Rockingham had seen Lord Weymouth this morning, & that Lord Weymouth most gratefully accepts Your Majesty's gracious Intentions towards him.

Lord Rockingham is also to inform Your Majesty, that Lord ^{Cheaton} Sheraton, & his Father Lord Waldgrave, most thankfully receive Your Majesty's Intentions of conferring on Lord Cheaton the Office of Vice Chamberlain.

Lord Carlisle having wrote to Lord Rockingham yesterday evening, offering to call, & to give

Ld. Rodenham

Every Information he was able in regard to the State & Situation of Your Majesty's Affairs in Ireland, Lord Rockingham has had the Honour of seeing him this Morning, & had the Satisfaction to find, that Lord Carlisle's Dispositions & Intentions were to give the best Assistance he could, & in every Respect seemed inclined to act with Candour & Propriety.

Lord Rockingham in consequence of their apparent Disposition, ventured to suggest that as a great Office of State was now vacant, an Opportunity might offer for Your Majesty's Grace & Favour towards his Lordship. Lord Rockingham expects that he shall be able to state Lord Carlisle's Inclination & Disposition more fully to your Majesty, when he has the Honour of attending your Majesty on Wednesday.

Lord Northampton has also seen Lord Essex, who is much concerned at the expected Loss which he will sustain by the Reform, & whose Circumstances your Majesty being apprized of,
has already expressed your gracious Intentions of relieving. If your Majesty should think Lord Essex a proper Person to succeed to the Honour of being a Lord of the Bedchamber, It would be a most acceptable Favour conferred on Lord Essex.

The State of the proposed Alterations & Reforms in the Offices of the Exchequer will be ready to be laid before your Majesty on Wednesday.
The Papers received from your Majesty on Sunday will be laid to Lord Northampton before the Council tomorrow.
