Prince of Wales
to the Lord Chancellor Carlton House Nov 22. 1804

The Prince of Wales has received a letter from the Chancellor enclosing a Paper which he understands to come from the King, containing the outline of a Plan for the future care of the Person and Education of His Daughter the Princess Charlotte.

It is with no inconsiderable degree of surprise, that the Prince observes in the very commencement of the Paper which the Lord Chancellor has transmitted to him, a reference to a communication through the Earl of Moray which can only relate to the letter which His Lordship wrote to the Chancellor (His Majesty never having been pleased to utter one word upon the subject to the Prince) the contents of which letter the Prince had not without reason flattered himself had been sufficiently explained to the Chancellor by the Prince himself in the Interview he had with His Lordship at Carlton House, the day but one previous to His Majesty's leaving Windsor for Weymouth, and by the Earl of Moray immediately before the last time His Lordship left London to resume his Command in Scotland, as well as very lately indeed, (but a few days ago) in the very last Interview He had had with the Lord Chancellor, in which Interview, the Earl of Moira assured the Prince that he had put the Chancellor most fully in possession of the Prince's feelings and intentions.

The Prince likewise knows, from the Earl of Moira, that he has completely informed Mr. Pitt of the whole of the Prince's dispositions and resolutions upon the subject. The Prince therefore returns the enclosed paper to the Chancellor, and desires that both He and Mr. Pitt will most respectfully but most thoroughly at the same time, explain to His Majesty what the Earl of Moira has been so fully authorized to communicate to them upon this head; And in order to prevent in future any misunderstanding and misinterpretation, the Prince further desires, that all communications with Him upon this subject, may pass through the Earl of Moira.
