My dear M^r. Nott.

I was extremely sorry that you were not able to partake of the pleasures we enjoyed on Papa's Birthday. I did write to him on the occasion, and I hope my letter was such as both He, and you would approve; certain I am that there were neither blunders, nor blots. Your goodness in thinking you were making me pens, shews evidently that I am seldom out of your thoughts: I hope to convince you also, when you come to Town that you have not been out of mine.

Your weakness, I am afraid will continue for some time; but I shall hope to find you on your return quite well, and in spirits. O! my dear M^r. Nott, your kindness to me, I never can thank you enough for: but I hope to make up all my lost time, when you return, by diligence, and constant application to my lessons, till I shall have remembered all your instructions.

I dare not write to you in Latin, for I should make so many blunders, that it would give you pain rather than pleasure.

I have no news to tell you.

M^{rs}. Noddy begs her kind Compl^{ts} to you. If you should find yourself under the necessity of staying longer, pray do not hasten back on my account. I am sure Lady de Clifford, as well as myself will be too happy to think that by your prolonging your stay, you may recover your health.

I am

My dear M^{rs} Nott

Yours ever Affectionate
