Sir

I cannot deny myself the Honour of writing to Your Majesty by Lord Minto though I fear it will not be quite so legible as usual having contrived to stain my Pen.

It gave me great pleasure to see Lord Minto as he had had the pleasure of seeing Your Majesty so much likes than myself. Indeed it is unpropable for those who have not been parted from their family to imagine the joy one feels at meeting with any body who can give some account of all those one loves. I am like an I report on those occasions: and though perfectly satisfied with my situation, and sincerely attached to the Duke, can never one moment forget the strong ties of duty and attachment which I feel for the best of Parents.

Lord Mordaunt has promised to take Louisbourg on his road that he may give Your Majesty some account of my favourite spot though it is not in beauty at present. If possible I contrive to spend one day there every week and watch a little my workmen who grow very idle if they are not followed.

The Duke desires that I will present his humble duty to Your Majesty I will now take up no more of Your time and remain with great respect
