Stuttgart November 7th, 1816.

My dearest Brother

I entreat you to receive with kindness the bearer of this letter Baron de Harppfer, who I wish to have the honour of conversing with you and answering any questions you may be so gracious as to ask him concerning a sister who is forever attached to you though at this moment deeply afflicted by the loss of the best of husbands.
Edward who spent some days at Lansdown will I am sure do justice to our attachment for each other, as also mention the anxiety I underwent on account of the late Kings health which I thought much broke of late years.

It is needless for me to make you metaphorically by dwelling on my heavy misfortunes they are engraven on my Heart, and I feel daily stronger the hope

I have sustained Religion above can give me courage to look forwards to a life which must now ever be clouded with sorrow.

My health is less good than the first days but amongst my Afflictions I have every reason to bless the Almighty for having given me the best of Sons.

The present Day being all duty and attention to me, The Queen is also
