Lord Mahon, who hath a very great Ascendancy over the Duke of Rutland, is very near inducing, or rather seducing, his Grace to take a decided part in (what will soon be denominated) the Duke of Richmond's party or Faction.

On the final conclusion of the present peace, the Criminals now confined in the Chatelet, Fort l'Esque, the Conciergerie, and in all the other criminal prisons in Paris, are to receive the French King's pardon, on condition of their immediately withdrawing themselves from the Kingdom of France, for which purpose they are to be conducted to Dieppe and Calais at the french King's expence, and are to be landed in England. A french man of the name of Demorand, now and for many years past resident in Duke-street Grosvenor-Square, is to have the Charge, Billeting, Cloathing, and payment of this numerous and desperate Body of Murderers, Assassins, Prisoners, Burglars, & Thieves, until such time as they shall be able to make good their own Quarters.

It is hoped, the fiscal coffers are not so depauperated, but that the King still hath it in Contemplation to extend his royal Bounty (now, eighteen Months in arrears) to
