Prince of Wales to Sir J. Boott

Kew. Sunday.

My good Sir Thomas, having heard by Strutt, that Y^r have bin Y^r exercise, and gone through Y^r Revelry with some glee, I could not forbear congratulating Y^r upon it. To be sure, did not Y^r find Revelry, in a circuit Y^r did not go through so much trouble, and live in so bad Company, as one must do in such an occasion; for without flattery Y^r are the first great Lawyer, that could be suffer'd in a decent Company, or that could live any body, that was not a Gown, take me ~~right~~, I do not mean a Petticoat, but a Parson, or a Lawyers-Gown, now Y^r Y^r Bottle, tho' superior to many in learning and experience, and surely inferior to none in honesty, Y^r mix with this a much more refin'd Taste, love good Company, and support the Arts and Sciences, How clo's[†] Lathom. I will there be soon a bed, I mean a Nuptial Bed, fit to contain the happy Bride, that will exclude those forbidden Pleasur's, Y^r too often take for the good of Y^r body and Soul, and that make Y^r the Terror of many.

Here I Stop, admire my discretion, and the field I have before me, I'll name no Woman, no particulars, from the Dches to the Lincolner-Wench, so I pretend to be admir'd for my caution. I have been at Recruits, and approve highly what he is doing for Y^r, it can't be better, ⁺ Goupy as well as I have giv'n him the design, but as the poor man could not go on, without some ready, and that my Bill is 74. Y^r and Y^r but 25., so I have paid him both, and I am sure nothing cheaper was ever done. I don't want the money before Y^r return, which I hope will be soon, and that we'll meet with Y^r at Y^r Adieu Y^r Broote. Y^r
