The letter of the Duke of Rutland too strongly indicates that the City of Dublin is far from being in that composed state which every friend to Civil Society must wish; as usual there seems to be much timidity in the Magistrates; I hope the Men of Property will feel the necessity of standing forth in aid of the Lord Lieutenant, and that the tranquility may be soon reestablished.

Lord Carmarthen with all humility begs leave to inform your Majesty, that having very good reason to believe that a Treaty is concluded between France & Sweden by which the former is to have a Depot, for naval stores at Gottenberg, in consideration of the cession of the Island of St Bartholomew to Sweden. Lord Carmarthen wishes to submit to your Majesty's consideration whether it would not be proper to convey the earliest information upon the subject to the Courts of Petersburg & Copenhagen.

I imagine Lord Carmarthen means the Island of St. Marguerite as the one supposed to be ceded by France to the King of Sweden on condition of having a constant Depot of Naval Stores at Gothenburgh; this is certainly not a pleasing measure to us, but I do not see that Russia will ~~be~~ ^{otherwise} feel herself hurt at it than as she seems to dislike her Neighbours entering into Treaties with any Powers but her.
Perhaps if we are too forward in conveying this intelligence she may lay it rather to the account of our wishing to treat with her than to any other motive; and her coldness does not incline me to exceed the bounds of civility; besides till I see this Country in a Situation more respectable as to Army, Navy, and Finances I cannot think any thing that may draw us into troubled Waters either safe or Rational.

The last Week I had the pleasure of receiving a letter from the Earl of Hardwicke, but at the same time rather disappointed he did not give a more favourable account of his health, the Waters he has used frequently do not immediately produce the effect desired ^{by the advantage} which appears some time after which I sincerely hope will be on this occasion the case.
I am glad the Earl of Hardwicke has so favourable an opinion of Doctor Douglas which certainly increases that I have ever entertained of him, and I shall be happy of seizing any proper opportunity I may find of advancing so able and worthy a Man. The Earl of Hardwicke could not have chosen a channel more agreeable to me of conveying his letter.

It is with infinite pleasure I have received by Mr. Pitt's note containing the agreeable account of the Committee on the East India bill having been opened by the Decision of so very decided a Majority; I trust this will prevent much trouble being given in its farther progress, and that this measure may lay a foundation for by degrees correcting those shocking enormities in India that disgrace human Nature, and if not put a stop to threaten the expulsion of the Company out of that Wealthy Kingdom I have the more confidence of success from knowing Mr. Pitt's good sense, which will make him not expect that the present experiments shall at once prove perfect; but that by an attentive Eye and an inclination to do only what is right. He will as occasions arise be willing to make such improvements as may by degrees bring this arduous work into some degree of perfection.

It is impossible to frame a letter more proper than Mr. Pitt's answer to the Duke of Rutland, as it in a masterly manner contains all the difficulties in the present stage of the business of forming a decided opinion; indeed great as the enormity is, as it amounts as yet only to words, the punishment is any could be obtained would not be adequate to the tendency of it; consequently I fully concur in the sentiments of this well drawn letter.
