The Duke of Portland most humbly begs leave to acquaint Your Majesty that the Union Bill has now passed the two Houses & lays ready to receive the Royal Assent whenever it shall be Your Majesty's pleasure to have it pronounced, & Your Majesty's servants represent with all humility to Your Majesty their hope that Your Majesty will deem it proper to

to have that Ceremony performed in Your Royal Presence. The Duke of Portland is desir'd also to inform Your Majesty that several Bills having pass'd yesterday by virtue of Your Majesty's Command. The former Bill is the only one which is ready to receive Your Majesty's Royal Assent —

The Duke of Portland begs leave to acquaint Your Majesty

An earnest desire of promoting the permanent happiness of my Subjects actuates every desire of my heart, and I am certain this can in no manner be more effectually attained, than by the most careful attention in filling up the Vacancies in the Church and more particularly in the more exalted situations.
This has made me reflect much on the now vacant ~~See~~ Bishop-rick of Down, and I am chiefly of opinion that the talents and zeal for Religion besides the being a man of family points out the Bishop of St Davids as peculiarly suited for that Preferment. Whilst he was out of health I supposed wishing to know his sentiments on this subject, as on these occasions you are not at liberty to judge with firmness, but rather to view the difficulties that ever attend any change.
I wish therefore Lady Charlotte Finch would through the channel of Mr. Streat to apprise the Bishop of my earnest wish, <sup>to place him where he can be of most use</sup> and that in point of Endowment it is infinitely more liberative than is in general supposed; I

Monday July 14th 1800

In consequence of the Note which I had the honor of receiving from your Majesty this morning, Mr Pitt has examined afresh the State of Business in Parliament, and much fears that it will not be possible by any Dispatch consistent with the necessary forms, to bring it to a conclusion till Monday or Tuesday in the Week after next; as the East India Bill cannot be brought in till 1800 all the Votes of Supply have been compleated, and it was not thought prudent to name an earlier Day than Friday next for voting the Subsidy to Austria, which Day had been accordingly fixed by a Notice given in the House Yesterday.

Mr Pitt humbly begs leave to take this Opportunity of acquainting Your Majesty that he finds Lord Stafford no longer feels any Hesitation with respect to Lord Granville Leveson's vacating his Seat for Staffordshire, and Mr Pitt presumes that Your Majesty will not Disapprove of Lord Grenville being appointed to fill the Vacancy in the Treasury. -

With respect to the Office of Chief Justice in Eyre, Mr Pitt finds that that Appointment would be particularly agreeable to Mr Grenville, and conceives that his Talents and Services in the Course of the last Year will appear to Your Majesty to render him not unworthy of it. - There is certainly no Ground but that of Your Majesty's Favour and Goodness on which it could be asked for him on the same Tenure of which it was held by Lord Sydney and his Predecessor, but if Your Majesty should think proper to extend so far your gracious Indulgence, It would complete the Satisfaction of Mr Grenville and those immediately connected with him; and on that account, not being aware that it could be attended with any Inconvenience, Mr Pitt ventures humbly to submit it to Your Majesty's favourable Consideration.

I then caused the Ships Company to be turned up, (the Prisoner present) and expatiated on the goodness of his Majesty whose Mind was always ready to incline to Mercy even when the Laws had condemn'd, as they must perceive in the present instance: and in order to impress their Minds more forcibly on this occasion, I read the 19th & 20th Art: of War - afterwards the Admir<sup>ty</sup> Letter communicating His Majesty's most gracious Offer to the Prisoner; - which I am happy to say was receiv'd by the whole Crew, with no less Satisfaction than Surprise.

Lord Grenville,

Cleveland Row July 16. 1800.
11. P.M.

Lord Grenville has the honour to submit to Your Majesty the minute of the unanimous opinion of Your Majesty's Servants at the Cabinet today. In consequence of what fell from Your Majesty this morning he thinks it due to His Colleagues as well as to Himself to assure Your Majesty, that he cannot see any ground for thinking, that the exertions necessary for continuing the War unsupported by any Continental Power, can be made in any other manner, than by shewing to Parliament and to the Country a readiness to treat conjointly with Austria, for a general Peace on reasonable terms.

No one can lament more sincerely than himself the necessity of such negotiation.

But it is his duty to submit to Your Majesty with the same sincerity the full persuasion of his

Lord Grenville,
Cleveland Row. 16. July 1800.

9698

his mind, that it is rendered unavoidable by the determination of Austria to negotiate. And if this opinion be not acted upon he trusts it is in the power of Your Majesty's Government to keep the business in their own hands, and to conduct it with dignity, with firmness, & with a due regard to Your Majesty's honour, & to the interests of the Country; whereas an effect precisely the contrary must result, as former experience has shown, from any measure taken under the pressure of public opinion, or under the influence of a failure of support in Parliament.

So long as any Continental Power Power would continue the War for the purpose of rescuing the Continent from the overbearing influence of the Arms & Revolutionary principles of France, it was, & still is, Lord Grenville's decided opinion, that this Country ought to persevere, and could do so with reasonable hopes of success. But in a contest single-handed, although the means and resources of the Country are abundantly sufficient to ensure the attainment of fit and honourable terms, Lord Grenville does not see the possibility of our compelling the Enemy, by our separate exertions, either to destroy the present usurpation in France, or to restore tranquillity and Independence.

independance to the Continent of Europe.

It is with the most sincere distrust of his own judgment, even when confirmed by that of his Colleagues, that Lord Grenville ventures to urge an opinion contrary to the impressions which seem to prevail in Your Majesty's mind. So his own feelings it would unquestionably be far more gratifying to persevere to the very last extremity, and to take every possible chance of a change of fortune. But he cannot think that Your Majesty's Servants would be justified in granting them their advice to Your Majesty on such feelings only; and entertaining that opinion he is sure Your Majesty would be the last person to wish that he should conceal or disguise it; or even to approve of his doing so.

Lord Minto to declare that under the present circumstances His Majesty will not oppose the Austrian Armistice, if judged absolutely necessary for the interests of the Court of Vienna, notwithstanding the right which arises to His Majesty under the late treaty: But Lord Minto is to declare, if any occasion should arise, that His Majesty does not judge it proper to agree to any Armistice on His part.

That Lord Minto
having already been instructed to apprise
the

the Court of Vienna that if that Court should be compelled to treat with the Enemy, His Majesty would not decline to take part in a negotiation entered into, in that case, for a general Peace. He should in any such event require that such negotiation should be carried on, not, as proposed by the Enemy, in Italy, but in some proper town of Germany where a proper person would be sent on His Majesty's part.

That in such case His Majesty would certainly support support such terms of Peace in Italy as the Court of Vienna would deem most advantageous to its own interests: and that His Majesty has in that view ratified the said Treaty, though the stipulations of it are now so inapplicable that it would be best not to exchange the ratifications: which however, if desired, Lord Minto is at liberty to do.

But that the Basis on which His Majesty proposes in such case

to treat for Peace, is that of an Uti Possidetis, from which He is not disposed to relax for the sake of any continen-tal arrangements other than such as may relate to Holland and the Netherlands.

That the first pay-ment of £ 666.000, under the late treaty, should immediately be made; but that the de-cision respecting the Sep-tember payment must be deferred till His Ma-jesty is enabled to judge judge of the course of events to which the present circumstances may give rise.

That Lord Minto
should prep for the im-

Treaty of Alliance including in it the Article respecting Commerce and Navigation.

Sir,

Permit me to express the lively sense I entertain of your Majesties repeated favours, and particularly of your goodness in thinking of me for so high a station in the Church.

Nothing can be more flattering to me than such a mark of your Majesties approbation: But I should very ill deserve it, were I not humbly to represent to your Majesty, that my infirm state of health renders me little fitted for an Office which requires unimpair'd vigour both of body and mind.

The humid Climate of Ireland would, probably, further enfeeble a very weak constitution; and (were not my life to be protracted for some years) the great expence of taking possession of Keshagh would utterly ruin my children.

The same goodness which prompted your Majesty to write will, I trust, induce you to pardon the presumption with which I have now laid before you some of the reasons that would influence me to decline going to Ireland, unless I received your Majesties command, or unless I were informed that my going thither might be of real service in supporting the cause of religion & virtue, which I well know to be an object nearest your Majesties heart.

Your Majesties goodness will render me forward, on all occasion, to profess the inviolable attachment & gratitude with which I am, Sir, your Majesties most obliged, & most dutiful subject & servant

Yesterday I received the Bishop of St. Davids letter, the diffidence he expressed as to his health, I rather expected; though the Irish Climate is certainly damp, it is uncommonly mild and therefore not void of <sup>real merit</sup> advantages. I certainly had fully viewed the advantages that must arise to the cause of Religion and Virtue in Ireland by his Promotion to the vacant Primacy of that Part of the British Empire, that I should not fulfill my Duty if I did not in the

Your Majesty's Confidential to Your Majesty their opinion that, at this Season of the Year, and in the present circumstances of Europe and of the War, it would not be expedient can be attempted with any reasonable prospect of Success.

With this view it is humbly submitted to Your Majesty that, in addition to the Troops now at the Isle of Rhé, amounting to about 2,500 Men, such further Force may be immediately embarked, as may complete the number to 12,000 effectives, that the Officer entrusted with the command of this Cape should consult with Lord St. Vincent on the practical possibility of an attempt on the Port of Ferrol, and in case it should appear to present a reasonable prospect of success, that the Attack should immediately be concerted between them, and be undertaken by this Corps of 12,000 Men and such a detachment of the Fleet as Lord St. Vincent may assign for this Service, with a view of destroying

Port. That should this Service be successfully executed, or relinquished as too hazardous, in either case the Force should then proceed to Gibraltar, where Sir Ralph Abercromby should also be ordered to repair with the disposable Mediterranean Force: That as soon as the two Corps shall be thus united, the whole shall proceed to an attack upon Cadix, with a view of destroying the Enemy's Ships & Arsenal at that Port: after which, or in case of its being relinquished as impracticable, a part of the Force should be employed in capturing Teneriffe, and such other of the Canary Islands, as in the opinion of the Naval be judged best calculated for a Naval & Military consultation, but humbly represent to your Majesty the joint sentiments of Mr Pitt and Mr Dundas in consequence of the Doubt which your Majesty's Note has been graciously pleased to suggest.

They feel that if an army collected at so much Expense, and by so unusual Exertions, was to remain inactive during the whole of the remainder of the Season, the Spirit of the Country would be let down, your Majesty's Government justly censured, and the impatience and clamour for peace on any terms encreased every hour.

They further feel and humbly represent to your Majesty, that on a reference to the minute of Cabinet, your Majesty will perceive that there is no intention of running any improper risk in any of the cases directed. The whole will rest on the judgement of the Respectable officers to be employed, and it is not felt that too much is left to their discretion. Sir James Puckney after discreet enquiry is impeded with an opinion that Terrot holds out a fair object of hope to the enterprise of your Majesty's Naval and Military force, and your Majesty's Servants humbly conceive that Lord St Vincent and Sir

James Pultrey ought to be furnished with the means of attempting Ferroll, if they think it expedient, and that in like manner Lord Heith and Sir Ralph Abercrombie are justly entitled to a similar confidence in so far as their operations may be implicated in the Propositions of the minute of Cabinet, which has been transmitted to your Majesty by your confidential servants.

Mr Jundas in his own name and that of our Pitt does further presume humbly to represent to your Majesty that if after the appropriation of 12000 men to the objects in view, which is less than was destined for Belle-Isle, and for a short time, it shall be concerned by your Majesty's subjects, that the various force existing in the Country, with an invincible Fleet, is inadequate to its security and they will feel themselves less comfortable than for the two years past.

 Mr Dundas is unwilling to trespass further on the indulgence of your Majesty, but he reports with much confidence in the candor and integrity of your Majesty's feelings, that if those who are entrusted by your Majesty with the conduct of your Majesty's affairs, possess the confidence of your Majesty, they will not be deprived of the benefit of it at a moment when it is so essentially necessary in every particular and in none more than the conduct of the War.

Mr Dundas humbly informs your Majesty that he was about to set out for Swinley this morning at six o'clock when he had the honour of receiving your Majesty's Note. Mr Dundas's reason of being prepared to go to Swinley was to settle the Detail with His Royal Highness The Duke of York of the Plans confidential Servants had met with your Majesty's ap-avoid any delay on his Part Mr Dundas thought it his Duty to come immediately to town to lay your Majesty's note before your Majesty's servants. Not finding either Mr Pitt humbly begs leave to submit to your Majesty's gracious consideration the draft of the Speech for the Conclusion of the Session; He trusts that the general Tone and Language of it is such as your Majesty will not disapprove, as altho' He has the Misfortune in common with the rest of your Majesty's Servants to entertain an Opinion respecting the Necessity of concuring with Austria in Negotiation which is unfortunately adverse to your Majesty's Personal Sentiments, He nevertheless feels it of the utmost Importance, that every Public Declaration should be calculated to maintain as high as is possible the Spirit of the Country during the Interval of Negotiation. - Mr. Pitt will not presume to trouble your Majesty further on this Subject or on any other at present, trusting that he may have the Opportunity of paying his Personal Duty to your Majesty at St James's at the Time Since writing the Note which Mr Pitt had the honor of addressing to your Majesty yesterday from Holfwood, (and which he directed to be dispatched from Town as soon as the Draft of the Speech could be copied, He has received from Mr Dundas your Majesty's farther Answer on the Subject of the late Minute of Cabinet, and is highly sensible of your Majesty's Condescension and Goodness in graciously attending to the Considerations which Mr Dundas and himself felt it their duty to lay before your Majesty. From the same motive, Mr Pitt ventures to rely again on your Majesty's Indulgence in humbly representing, that if the attack on Fenwick should be found practicable, it is of the utmost Importance from the advanced season of the year, that it should be executed without loss of time; and also, with a view to security, that the troops destined for it should be sent out as Reinforcements to those now in the Bay, instead of the whole being collected here, as by these means the Expedition will still be supposed to be directed against Bellisle. On these grounds Mr Pitt humbly hopes it will not be found necessary that Troops so recently sent for Foreign Service should be brought home again previous to the Expedition, but if there are any Additional Articles of which they are supposed to be in need,

These should be sent out to them as expeditiously as possible together with the Reinforcement. With the same Object of saving Time, He also begs again to submit that it is very desirable to avoid the necessity of any Reference home, and as the Object is a very simple one, it seems safe to entrust the Decision, under proper Conditional Instructions, to the Discretion of Lord St Vincent and Sir James Pulteney on the Spot.

Mr Dundas humbly states to your Majesty that on the Receipt of your Majesty's commands on the Subject of Ferroll, he immediately transmitted them to Mr Pitt, who will receive your Majesty's pleasure upon them. It only remains for Mr Dundas to remark that the Delay which would arise from the preliminary steps your Majesty has pointed out, as proper to be adopted previous to the measures suggested by your <sup>servants,</sup> do not correspond with the secrecy and promptitude which your he pursued on this occasion, the same line of conduct He has uniformly done, since He had the honour of a matters of smaller Detail He has presumed to act on matters of such Magnitude as that now in question, He has always conceived himself to be acting in the manner most respectfull to your to the Publick Service, when he laid his Propositions before your Majesty matured by the united Wisdom of those to whom your Majesty has Having stated this much in apology for his own conduct, Mr Dundas begs leave with the utmost Humility, and the most profound Respect, to state to your Majesty that in his poor Judgement the appropriation of the National like every other Resource of the Empire, be subject to the advice and Responsibility of your Majesty's confidential

Cleveland Row July 31. 1800.

Lord Grenville has the honour to lay before Your Majesty the minute of yesterday's Cabinet upon the Danish business, together with the drafts and other papers relating to it.
Lord Whitworth is ready, if Your Majesty shall approve of it, to proceed immediately on his mission. The measures for sending sending the Squadron may, as Lord Spencer thinks, be so concerted as to prevent any suspicion of it either here, or at Copenhagen, till their actual arrival in the Sound.

Downing Street
July 30. 1800.

Present

The Lord Privy Seal

Duke of Portland

Earl Spencer

Earl Camden

Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer

Mr. Secretary Dundas

Mr. Windham

Lord Grenville.

It was agreed humbly to represent to His Majesty that it may be proper, in consequence of what has passed respecting the Danish Convoy,

That an answer should should be returned to Count Wedel's note conformably to the draft which has now been read.

That a squadron of ships of the line should immediately be dispatched to the Sound, with orders to remain there till further orders, but not to commit hostilities except in the case of the detention or capture of any of the British ships in the Baltic, or of the sending away His Majesty's Minister from Denmark; or lastly of any hostile conduct on the part of that Power against the Squadron itself.

That Lord Whitworth

should forthwith proceed on a special mission to the Court of Copenhagen.

That he should be instructed to make a demand of satisfaction, and of sufficient security for the future. And that he should be empowered ultimately to accept, as such satisfaction and security, a declaration or convention by which the Court of Denmark shall agree not to give any further effect to the institutions on which their officer has now acted, nor to renew those orders: And that in return for this conception

- ception he should be authorized to engage for the restitution of the private and convoy: the same being to be detained in the mean time as a pledge for this reparation.

In the event of any such hostile conduct as is before stated, the Officer Commanding the Squadron is to do his utmost to destroy the Ships and Arsenal of Copenhagen.
