

Oct. 1. 1811

MEG | 16 | 3 | 1

Sir

Altho' the King was almost altogether engaged throughout the early part of yesterday in his fancied intercourse with imaginary persons about him, and manifested at Dinner time in a religious ceremony every palpable proof of his distempers - yet as His Majesty appeared to be contented and amused, we should have reported it a better day than some which have passed lately. About five o'clock, however His Majesty became irritable - and His attempts to throw off all his clothes were so obstinate and mischievous that the President became necessary - and he was taken to bed at an earlier hour than usual to shorten the duration of his confinement.

The King slept about four hours and a quarter, but awoke so turbulent and intractable as to render Deshaunt again indispensable. His Majesty appeared good humoured alone interested but was entirely absorbed by fancied converse with Persons who have been long since dead, and whom he addressed and received answers from, as tho they were real and living.

I am, Sir, most respectfully
Your Royal Highness's Faithful Servant

Henry Kalford

Windsor Castle -

Oct: 1. 1811.

Bull^h: His Majesty continues in the same state.

H Kalford
to the bearer
Dr. Willis.

Oct. 2. 1811

MED 116/3/2

Dr Baillie has the honour of informing the Prince-Regent, that His Majesty pass'd yesterday in a quiet manner - He was almost constantly engaged with the fancies of His own mind, and was often addressing ideal Persons as if present - and even thought sometimes that He heard answers returned by those Persons - His Majesty was sometimes occupied, but only for a short time together, with His Harpsichord & Flute -

His Majesty had a momentary passion when the hour of Bed was announced to Him, but He went to Bed without any force for that purpose being necessary

He slept in the night four hours without interruption, but when he awoke he became turbulent as usual so as to require restraint to be imposed for several hours - At our visit this morning His Majesty talked in the same irrational manner as usual & could not be brought to attend for more than ^{half} a minute to the lecture of the President of the College of physicians, which took place on Monday last, about which circumstance formerly He us'd to show great curiosity and interest -

Windsor Castle
Oct 2 - 1811

Oct. 3. 1811 MCD/16/3/3

Sir

I found nothing better on my return last night - but on the other hand, I think worse. His Majesty appears under rather more excitement this morning than he has done lately - and seems not to have the power of commanding my His attention at all. We have stated to your Royal Highness frequently within the last three weeks that the King appeared to be holding converse with imaginary Persons about Him - and that He spoke as if He had received answers to observations which He had made to them. His Majesty was almost wholly engaged in this manner at our interview, today; and the late King was appealed to frequently by His Majesty for His opinion upon points which came up, and for favors to be granted. His Majesty slept three hours, but became intractable soon after he awoke, and was under restraint from three o'clock in the morning until seven.

I am, Sir, most respectfully
Your Royal Highness's faithful
servant

Henry Balfour.

Windsor Castle - Oct: 3. 1811.

Ball:

His Majesty continues in the same
state —

A. Balfour
M. Baillie
R. Waller

In Oct 4. ? MED|16|3|4

Sir
We thought His Majesty left well in his bodily health yesterday than he has appeared lately. - The King complained of head-ach with a sense of heat in his head - and was more excited than he had been in the last few days in his manner.
Some Antimony was given at bed time,
and this was repeated at bed time - the effect of the first dose having been a nausea, which disinclined the King to his food -

The state of the mind was much the same - The King still continued to address his imaginary company - and talked incessantly - His Majesty slept between three and four hours - and we find him alone interviewed this morning - much the same - not inclined to get up - and extremely impatient of the least interruption - but looking rather better than he did yesterday evening.

I am, Sir, most respectfully, your Royal Highness's faithful servant

Henry Hatford.

Bulletin

His Majesty continues in the same
state.

Windsor Castle

Henry Hatford
W. Reberden
A. Miller.

Med 16/3/5

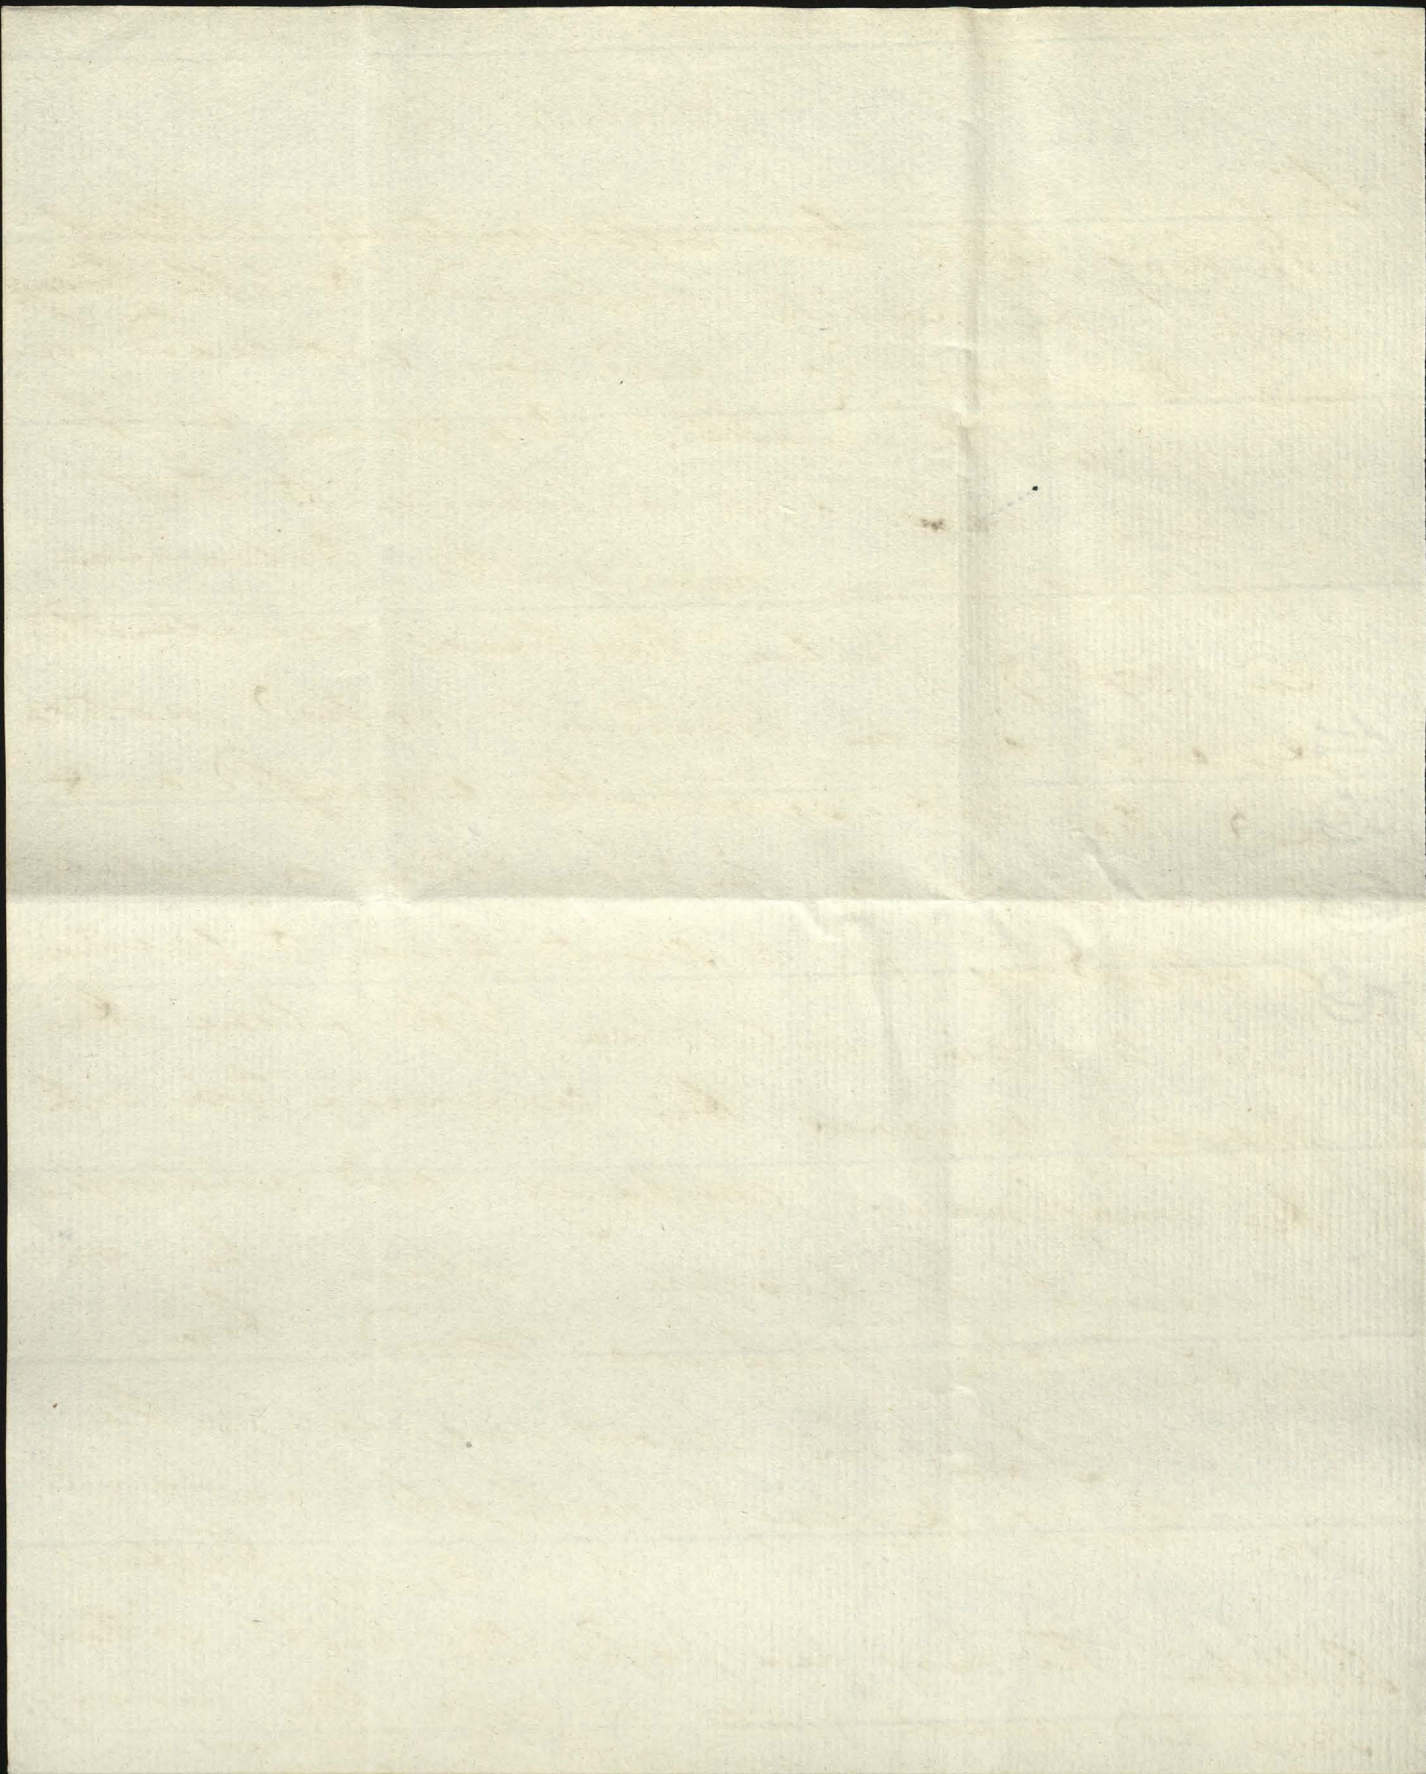

October 5th 1800

Sir

The King passed last night entirely without sleep - His Majesty continued to talk through-out the whole day, and has not ceased an instant in the night. It appears as if the King ~~was~~ approaching to that state which we have call'd Delirium. His Majesty's pulse has been accelerated. His eyes are in constant rapid motion, and tho' not so wholly engross'd as to be insensible to interruption, or incapable of attending for a short time to questions put to Him, yet when left alone His Majesty resumes His conversation with His imaginary company, and addresses a variety of people whom He conceives to be standing round Him.

I am, Sir, most respectfully
Your Royal Highness's faithful Servant
Henry Haller.

P.S. The King has passed the night without sleep, and is not quite so well this morning.
signed by all the Physicians -

To His Grace The Arch B^{sh} of Canterbury.

MSO 16/3/6

My Lord,

Altho' we were pleas'd with the assurances which your Grace gave us, that Dr. Moberdens letter had not left an impression on your mind injurious to us his Colleagues; yet we cannot help, attributing this, rather to your Grace's humanity & good nature, than to the sense, which that letter is capab^l of imparting. Uneasy therefore as we must be, so long as a document be found among your records, which it is possible to construe to our discredit in the conduct of the King's Case, and doubly anxious as we must feel, to prevent a train of reflection in the Majesty's Mind, so calculated to aggravate the affliction; we presume to request your Grace to read and to preserve a reply to it, and to lay before the Queen a faithful copy of the same. Your Grace seem'd to think that nothing more was implied in Dr. Moberdens letter in regard.

regard to his Colleagues, than that he had differed from them in opinion. - It appears to us my Lord, that a desire to record a difference of opinion upon measures which have been adopted, (and it is true with an unsuccessful Issue, tho' it would be unjust to attribute the failure to their adoption) is not only a censure upon those who entertained different Sentiments from himself, but is indirectly a claim to credit, which we cannot allow.

Dr Meiboden assumes it as a principle that after such repeated attacks of disease, at the advanced period of His Majesty's life, a degree of permanent delusion and imbecillity was to be apprehended more particularly from a want of sight, and that the remedy for this was to supply the sources of real images precluded by blindness, from a more liberal measure of amusement, and of intercourse with His Royal Family.
We believe that it has not been found by experience that deranged persons are apt to

to the thing. We certainly did all think that in His Majesty's present state, reading to him would be attended with no advantage, but we consented without difficulty to a trial of this measure. - It would not be expected
we should give it a warm concurrence, when we were convinced, that in the then state of His Majesty's mind, it was not like to be attended with any good effect.

About four months ago, in a better state of the King's mind, an ample trial was given to it by Dr Willis, with the hearty approbation of us all.

We would have wished to have been spared
the necessity of making a reply to another part of Dr Meberdens Letter, in which he mentions that he was the only Physician called by His Majesty himself to attend him during his illness. - We believed this not to be quite correct; - but the Royal Family, if we dare take the liberty of appealing to the Majesty for information on the occasion, is able to explain.

explain what were the King's intentions, and sentiments on this subject.

In the statement now submitted to your Grace, our only object has been to justify our own conduct, and we have not been actuated by any feelings of animosity to:
:ward Dr. Heward.

Widdow Coakley.	Signed	M: Mulford.
5. October	Copy	M: Baillie.
1811.		M: Willis.
		David Dundas

to become imbecile from seclusion.

and the measure of amusement, and of intercourse with His Royal Family which was granted to His Majesty, was in fact found to be more than he could bear.

It became, not a measure of Advice, but of absolute necessity to withdraw the indulgences which were granted to Him.

With these indulgences indeed Dr Aberden contended for the propriety of correcting extravagancies of conduct, as they might arise, tho' He thought the Delusions ought not to be interfered with.

We have not opposed in a single instance the correction of the extravagancies of His Majesty's conduct, but most of us have thought that the Delusions ought also to be corrected, whenever the state of His Majesty's Mind & temper would allow this to be done with any prospect of success - The latter we have considered to be much more important than the former, as marking more decidedly a diseased state of Mind, and with which the extravagancies of

of his conduct are intimately connected.

Dr. Mcbriden has not attempted to correct these extravagancies, but has occasionally appeared to apologize for some of them, as according in a great measure with some of His Majesty's natural habits.

It should be remarked that Dr. Willis in his experience has seen little advantage in cases of derangement from attempting to correct either delusions or extravagancies of conduct by argument, and in the present case he has more especially considered indulgence and correction as incompatible one with the other; — that in a general point of view it is wrong to place a patient in a situation where his errors will necessarily be called forth, and being so placed, it is wrong to attempt to correct him, because this cannot be done without the danger of increased irritation.

Dr. Mcbriden has mentioned the cold acquiescence of his colleagues in his plan of sending to

MC0/16/2/7

Mr Baillie has the honour of informing the Prince-Regent, that since the Report Yesterday morning His Majesty continued to talk in separately till Three in the morning
— The talking was commonly not very rapid nor in an elevated tone of voice — In the afternoon the voice became less and less loud, till it was changed into a sort of whisper — His Majesty began to sleep about Three in the morning and has continued to sleep since that time with very little interruption — His Majesty has not yet awoken — This sleep has been procured by Opium —

Windsor Castle

Oct 6 - 1811

9 1/4 - a. m.

Bulletin

The King continued nearly in the same state throughout yesterday - His Majesty has slept during the last six hours —

Dr. Baillie
Oct. 6. 1811.

Oct 7. 1811

Med/16/3/8

Sir

The King has had abundance of sleep since the administration of the opiate - enough, indeed, to have raised an expectation of improvement in the condition of the mind as well as the body, if the state of the former had been capable of material improvement by this resource.

The influence of the laudanum opiate proved however, to terminate about eleven o'clock - after which the King became turbulent, and obstinate in his attempts to get rid of all his bed clothes - After a patient and proper forbearance - it was at length absolutely necessary to recur to the restraint - and His Majesty remained in confinement during the rest of the night - when the King spoke for His Majesty was rather less cathartic, He displayed all his diseas'd notions - and received the Physicians this morning in a less satisfactory manner & than than usual -

I am Sir, most respectfully Your Royal Highness's faithful
Servant

Henry Sturford

Bullth
His Majesty has had a good deal of sleep - but is not materially improved by it.

Windsor Castle
Oct: 7.

Oct 8. 1811

mcob/16/3/9

Sir

The state of excitement under which we left His Majesty alone visit in the morning yesterday made it proper to administer a small dose of the Antimonial Medicine by which it was relieved - but the excitation of His Majesty's mind appeared throughout the day just the same as we have had occasion to represent it constantly of late, notwithstanding the King's manner was more composed.

In the early part of the evening, however, the King became more irritable, and began to talk to imaginary beings standing about Him - under these circumstances the opiate was repeated, tho' in a rather large dose - but the King has not slept more than ten minutes in the night - and appears to us this morning as eager in his manner, and as much confused and lost in his ideas

as we have seen His Majesty at any time.
Perhaps the Opiate may have its influence presently - and the day may pass better.
It certainly has begun very transpiring.

The Queen received a letter from Her Majesty's Council yesterday evening expressing of their entire acquiescence in Her Majesty's wishes - and interesting that they had sent Messrs to the their Consulting Physicians in consequence we do not know however, at present when they are to be expected here.

I am, Sir, most respectfully
Your Royal Highness's faithful servant

Windsor Castle. Oct: 10. 1871. Henry Hallford.

Ball. The King continues much the same.
H. Hallford
W. P. Hallford
P. Willis

Oct. 9. 1811

Dr Baillie has the honour of informing the Prince-Regent that His Majesty passed yesterday in a quiet half drowsy state

The opiate which He took the evening before was enough to lessen irritation but not to procure sleep — When the hour of Bed was announced to His Majesty, He became violently enraged, and has not at any time made more resistance to His clothes being taken off —

His Majesty slept last night about five hours and an half, and when He awoke, He became turbulent as usual, making strong efforts to throw off His clothes, so that restraint became necessary — In our visit this morning His Majesty was good humoured shewed some recollection of former circumstances, but the maps of His own

vacation was as irational as ever —

Windsor Castle

Oct 9 - 1811

Bulletin

His Majesty continues much the same —

Dr. Baillie.

Oct. 9. 1811.

Oct. 10 1811 MCD/16/3/11

Sir,

The King pass'd a quieter day yesterday than any of the last fortnight - This in the course of it, and particularly at dinner time, His Majesty discover'd and acted under the influence of, all his disturbed notions. His Majesty went to bed at his usual hour in a still and gentle manner - but during his undressing refer'd, as usual, to the strange arrangements which his fancy had formed in respect to persons who have been long since dead - and whom His Majesty conceiv'd to be still about his bed, and in his house - The King slept about four hours and a half. and was for two hours in the early part of the morning under Restraint - At our visit this morning. His Majesty was well in his manner - but con-

-fard and desultory, and immethodical in his detail of circumstances which had occurred to him - and of schemes which he was forming.

The Consulting Physicians arrived between seven and eight o'clock last night, and were present when His Majesty went to bed - They were in the King's room this morning also, at the usual visit of the ordinary Physicians - and certainly had abun-dant opportunity of deciding upon the state of His Majesty's mind - and believe, that all His errors betrayed themselves during the time of their stay.

I am, Sir, most respectfully, your Royal Highness's faithful servant
Henry Galford.

Bulletin

The being contents much the same.

Signed

H. Holford

M. Baskin

W. H. Hudson

A. W. Miller

Oct: 10. 1871.

[Faint, illegible handwriting on aged paper]

Oct. 11. 1811 mco/16/3/12

Sir

His Majesty passed the day yesterday as composedly as the day before - His ex- being occasionally interrupted in His review the King burst forth into strong expressions of indignation - These fits of passion, however, were of shorter duration than we have lately seen them -

His Majesty slept a little more than four hours last night - but soon after He awoke became so intractable as to require to be confined for some hours - at our interview this morning the King was mild and good humoured - spoke reasonably for a very short time respecting the Haverfield - and His laying out a garden for the Duke of Sax-Gotha - but soon declined into all His distempred notions -

The consulting Physicians saw a good deal of His Majesty yesterday, at

His Majesty's dinner time, early again in the evening - and also when His Majesty went to bed - as well as this morning I do not know their opinions - but it is certain that the King has become all His disorder during the time of their stay in His room -

I am, Sir, most respectfully
Your Royal Highness
faithful servant

Henry Malford.

Windsor Castle. Oct. 11. 1871.

Journal

The King continues much the same.

Signed

H Malford
to the King
W. Malford
D. W. Malford

M 60116/3113
Oct: 11. th 1841. Today evening
Windsor Castle

Sir

I have been waiting in great anxiety to hear the Consulting Physicians' Declare their opinions of the King's case, that I might inform your Royal Highness upon a subject necessarily so interesting to your feelings. We had a most liberal and a most satisfactory consultation to day. when they all admitted His Majesty's state to be a state of Insanity, tho' peculiar in some circumstances - and they were ingenuous enough to declare in explicit terms, which they repeated that they thought nothing better could be done for His Majesty's comfort and recovery than what the Physicians already in attendance had directed. Moreover, that little or nothing was left them to propose either in regard to medicine or to management - whatever they had to recommend was altogether for the body - their only speculation of doing good to the mind being through the constitution.

With this view they advised that His Majesty should take the Sueti Tacki in very small doses two or three times a day - so as to act a little upon the skin - and the occasional use of two grains of Salomel perhaps once in four or five days.

These remedies it was observed could be administered to His Majesty un-perceived - for they held it inadvisable to attempt to give the thing any medicine which His Majesty could not take without compulsion - & suffering an opiate or a Purgative, when the urgency of circumstances rendered these resources indispensably. The deficiency of bile in the evacuations still appear to manifest the want of some better action in the organ which secretes it - and the Antimony provided it were not given in doses large enough to shake and enervate the frame would cooperate with the Mercurial in this intention.

As to the mind, and what we term management, it seem'd to them quite out of the question at this time, tho' if the state of it should improve there might be some advantage from an occasional correction of the King's errors whenever the proper

Opportunity should arise; but that required considerable discretion. At this instant they did not entertain even the question of the propriety of any of Dr. Richardson's schemes for substituting real ideas in place of the distemp'd notions. Their opinion did not bear them out in the suspicion of the possibility of producing any good effect by the means he suggests - Their remarks, therefore on management were confin'd strictly and literally to suggestions about covering and clothing which might protect the King's body against the greater ^{probability} probability of His Majesty's taking cold, whilst under the influence of these medicines.

I have it for granted that they will state all these their opinions to the Queen

11 Oct 1811

Council tomorrow in terms of the same import which I have used to convey their sentiments to your Royal Highness - and then their future visits must, I should think, be determined to be rare, and short. Perhaps it will be right to propose that we should all meet them next Friday - in order that they may give the Queen's Council their comparison on the next day.

Your Royal Highness's tender cousin and good relative will forgive me I know if I have troubled your Royal Highness with this long letter unacceptably or prematurely, and I hope, Sir, your Royal Highness will always believe me to be most respectfully, Sir, one of your Royal Highness's faithful servant Henry Balguy

[Faint, illegible handwritten text, likely bleed-through from the reverse side of the page.]

Oct 11. 1811

ME016/3/14

Sir

The King appeared in very good humour, and perfectly contented with himself throughout the day - and we observe that it is in this state that His Majesty discovers more fully His erroneous notions - The religious ceremony at His deane's Tombs, ~~seem'd~~ to strike the consulting Physicians forcibly - and it must have made a deeper & more firm state on their minds that all the distempred ideas which fill'd His Majesty's thoughts were expressed by His Majesty in His usual natural manner.

At bed time His Majesty was extremely violent for a short time and was oblig'd to be carried into His chamber - The King slept four hours and a quarter - but the sheep was more broken and less sound than usual - His Majesty's reception of the Physicians this morning was good humoured - but he seem'd so overwhelm'd with His Majesty's ideas, that no impression was made on his mind by anything that pass'd from them.

I am, Sir, most respectfully
Your Royal Highness's faithful
servant

Henry Hallford

Oct: 11. 1811.

Windsor Castle

Lu. Oct 12, 1811 M60/16/3/15

Sir

Your Royal Highness is sufficiently apprised of His Majesty's state yesterday to render it unnecessary for me to report any thing which occurred to me it before the King went to bed. On the hour for leaving His room being announced to His Majesty, He burst forth into expressions of violent indignation and conducted Anne M to improperly as to make it necessary to carry Him to bed. His Majesty slept few hours in the night - but became turbulent and intractable soon after He awoke, and was put under Restraint in consequence. At the interview of the Physicians this morning His Majesty's spirits were high, and He seemed pleased with the fancies which were prevailing in His mind. The King began to detail

an anecdote or two - but did not finish them - and soon in fact became so lost in arrangements which he proposed in reference to some of the objects of his discarded preference that he forgot the Physicians were there - and they left His Majesty addressing various persons who had been dead for ages, as if they were then present and before Him.

I am Sir most respectfully
Your Royal Highness's faithful servant
Henry Hallford

Bulletin

The thing continues in the same
state.

Signed

A Hallford
W Mackie
R Willis

Oct. 13. 1811

Dr Baillie has the honour of informing the Prince-Regent that His Majesty pass'd yesterday very much as He has done His days lately — He has been quiet, some times engaged with His Harpsichord and Flute, but more frequently with His own distemper'd notions — He slept last night about four hours & an half, and also slept a good deal in the Evening before He went to Bed — When He awoke in the night He made the usual attempts to throw off His clothes, so that Comprehment for several hours became necessary — This morning at our visit, His conversation entirely related to the wild

fancies of his mind —

Windsor Castle

Oct 13 — 1811

Bulletin

His Majesty continues in the
same state

The Bulletins in future will be exhibited on Sundays only —

Dr. Bailli

Oct. 13. 1011.

Oct. 14 1811

MSB.16.3.17

Sir

I need not repeat the account you Royal Highness received yesterday of His Majesty's condition - I found on my return that my colleagues had considered yesterday as a quiet day,
and His Majesty went to bed without resistance, or even reluctance soon after nine o'clock. The King slept uninterruptedly from a quarter before ten till one o'clock - soon after which His Majesty became more noisy and turbulent than usual, so as to render restraint absolutely necessary until after six o'clock in the morning.

When the Physicians went to wait upon His Majesty at their usual hour they found the King so irritable and unwise as to make it impracticable to feel His Majesty's pulse, or to attempt to obtain any other information about His bodily health, at that moment, than what could be acquired by mere personal observation - We are inclined to believe that His Majesty in the ordinary course of His distemper would not become more irritable at this time, and perhaps the operation of His Majesty's medicine may give Him uneasy feelings which may aggravate that irritability.

I am, Sir, most respectfully
Your Royal Highness'
faithful servant

Windsor Castle
del: 14. 1811.

Henry Hallford

Oct. 15 1811

MCB/16/3/18

Sir

The King was engaged in His Majesty's scenery all day long yesterday, and amused himself by making provision for travelling to distant parts of the world with the objects of His Majesty's preference, and by arranging officers and appointments for a large company whom His Majesty conceived to be standing about Him. All this passed, however, in perfect good humour - and we had not occasion to observe irritability and excitement often than once or twice in the course of the day. His Majesty went to bed quietly at His usual hour, and slept about four hours and a quarter, and when he awoke, he resumed the subjects which engage His attention so gelassively in the same mild manner as yesterday, and it has not been necessary to have recourse to the Restraint. His Majesty was rather

more inevitable, however, at our visit this morning, and we left the King without having had the satisfaction of observing His Majesty attentive to any one natural or reasonable object.

I am, Sir, most respectfully
Your Royal Highness's

Faithful servant

Henry Balfour

Windsor Castle

Oct: 15. 1811.

meo 116/2/19
Oct. 16 1811

Dr Baillie has the honour of informing the Prince-Regent that His Majesty pass'd yesterday Forenoon much as usual - perhaps His Majesty was a little more irritable than He had been for a day or two lately - At dinner this irritation increas'd and His Majesty did not finish his dinner because He had been refus'd some food which He ask'd, & which it was thought advisable not to grant - At Three in the afternoon His Majesty fell asleep, and slept for three quarters of an hour - When He awoke, He became very intractable, so that

Restraint became immediately necessary - It was taken off however at six O'Clock - His Majesty slept for more than half an hour in his Chair before the usual hour of going to Bed, and He went to Bed willingly - He slept however only three hours in the night and when He awoke became soon so turbulent as to require again to be confined - His Majesty received us this morning in good humour, but He shewed His mind to be in the same dis-temper'd state, as we have lately so uniformly witness'd.

Windsor Castle

Oct 16 - 1811

Oct. 17. 1811

Ms. A. 16. 3. 20

Sir

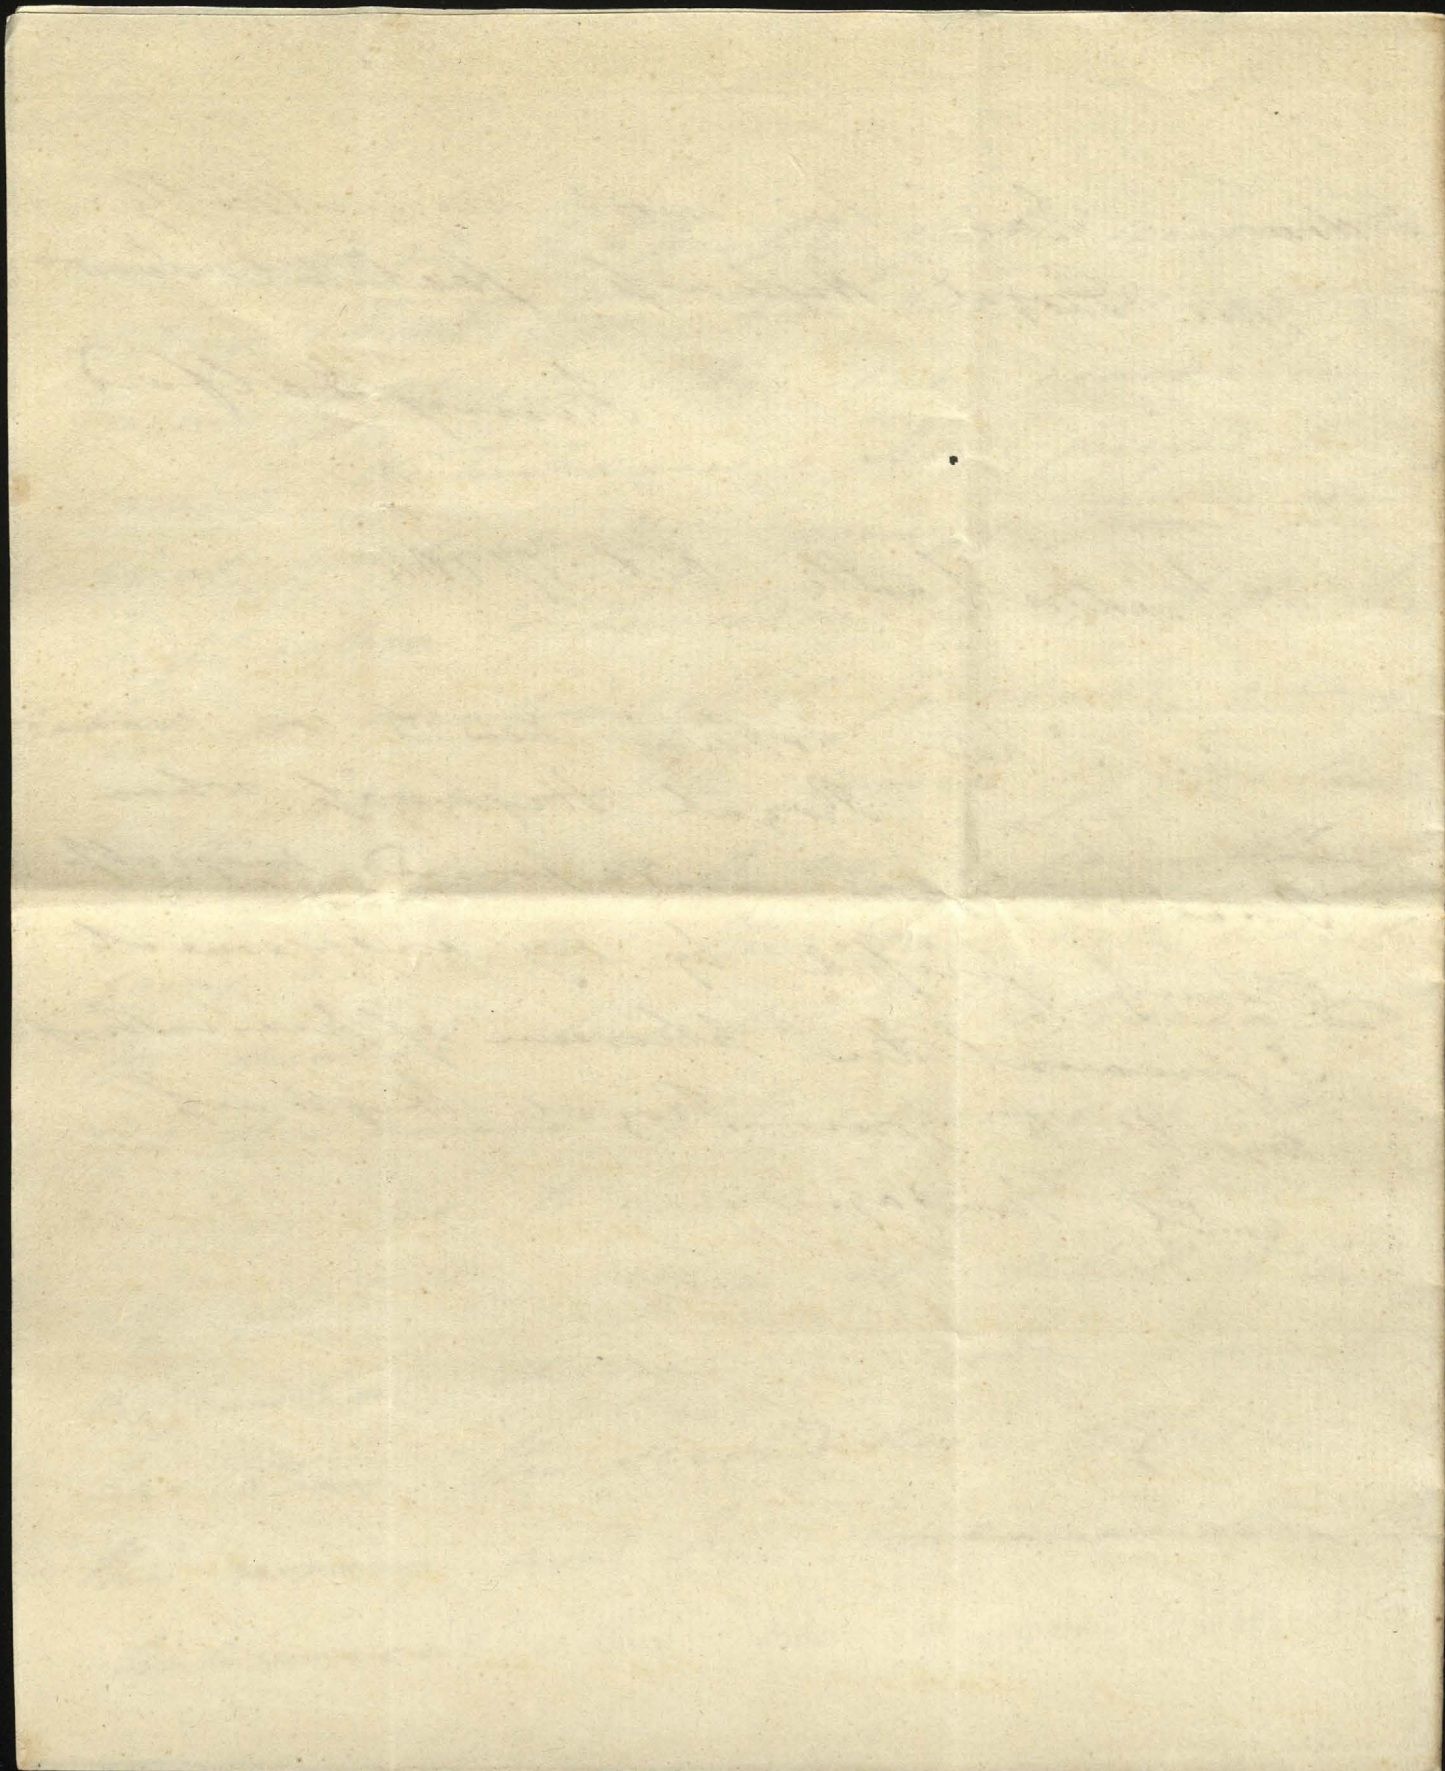

I found on my return last night, from my colleagues, that the King had been more unwell than usual for the last two days - so that His Majesty took His meals with less regularity than He has been accustomed to do each day - His Majesty went to bed, however, by His own desire at an early hour, and was undressed without resistance - but He did not fall asleep till twelve o'clock - nor has the measure of His sleep in the course of the night exceeded three hours and a quarter - but His rest has been necessary, and His Majesty's reception of the Physicians this morning has been mild and in perfect good humour - but His fancy appeared with fullest force, and His Majesty's notions were as extraordinary and unnatural as ever. The King has complained of noises made by people of His Majesty's standing about Him, and has endeavoured frequently to close His ears against such seeming disturbances - He expressed moreover great comfort this morning from the application of lavender water to His head,

the evaporation of it probably occasioning an agreeable sense of coolness - all this suggests to us a something going on within the head with which the mental disorder is associated - but the nature of the wrong is not so clear as to enable us to found any practice upon it likely to be of beneficial service - His Majesty has taken the second dose of Malumel this morning, and has continued the Antimonial, tho' in a more limited close. I am Sir, most respectfully your Royal Highness faithful servant

Henry Balfour.

Windsor Castle Oct: 17. 1811.

As I had nothing new to communicate to your Royal Highness when I was in Town, and found myself extremely press'd by my engagements I forewent the pleasure of presenting myself to your Royal Highness until Sunday.

Oct. 18. 1811

MsO/16/3/21

Sir

His Majesty was more silent yesterday than is usual - but betray'd never theless a good deal of irritability occasionally - The King slept the greater part of the afternoon but did not appear at all the better for it - as His Majesty's manners when he went to bed was as violent and boisterous as we have noticed it at any time - He slept for an hour and a quarter before midnight - but was obliged to be dress'd when he awoke - and pass'd the remainder of the night without sleep, and under confinement. Then did not appear thro' the whole of yesterday any interval in which, even for an instant, His Majesty was not occupied by strange unfounded conceits, and at our visit this morning the King's mind was still so filled with ~~phantasies~~ - tempestuous fancies, that we could not find room for the introduction of any natural images -

His Majesty refer'd more than once yesterday evening after His sleep to the disturbance which His imaginary company gave Him, and call'd out at our entrance for the application of the lavender water to His head.

I am, Sir, most respectfully
your Royal Highness's faithful servant

Henry Halford.

Windsor Castle

Oct: 18. 1711.

Oct. 19. 1811 Meo/16/3/22

Sir

The King's manner after His Majesty awoke yesterday morning made us apprehensive that the day would not pass without our witnessing such an increase of agitation and excitement as would require restraint. His Majesty shook, indeed, but little - but His countenance was full of anger, and at five o'clock in the afternoon it was absolutely necessary to confine His Majesty to prevent His getting rid of every part of His dress.

Nothing went to bed, however, quietly, and slept above five hours after beginning of the night. After He awoke His Majesty became extremely violent and unruly, and was not to be managed at all without the usual means of Montreal.

At our interview

This morning His Majesty was mild and good humoured - and with a profusion of wrong - manifested a little more correct-
-edness than He has done of late - and gave for the instant more attention to what was interposed by the ^{word} Physicians in turn. Tho' it could hardly be said that His Majesty's best conversation had not a close connection with all His distempred opinions.

I am, Sir, most respectfully
Yours Royal Highness
Jacobus Lewis

Windsor Castle - Oct: 19 1811. Henry the 9th.

Bulletin - for tomorrow. —
The King has continued nearly in the same state throughout the week.
Signed by all the Physicians —

Oct 20, 1811

ME016/3/23

Dr Baillie has the honour of informing the Prince Regent, that His Majesty was more silent than usual throughout the whole of yesterday - about Three o'clock He slept for twenty minutes, and afterwards in the Evening about an hour & an half - When the Hour of Bed was announced to Him, His Majesty went to it without reluctance - His conversation then was good humoured but was very trifling and irrational -

His Majesty slept only 25 minutes during the Night - He was either talking about his disordered Fancies, or abusing the men, or endeavouring to throw off the clothes, so that Restraint

for some time became necessary
- The interview this morning was very short - His Majesty got into a violent fit of anger at one of the physicians not assenting to something which He had said, and immediately broke up the visit -

Windsor Castle

Oct 20 - 1811

Oct 21 1811 ne0116/e/24

Mr Baillie has the Honour of informing the Prince Regent, that His Majesty remained throughout the afternoon & evening of yesterday in the same irritable state which was described to His Royal Highness — His Majesty was very silent, but there was a look of settled anger on his countenance
— In the evening he frequently stamp'd both his feet with violence upon the floor when any person either enter'd the room or walk'd across the floor of it — This he said he did by the orders of God Almighty — When the hour of going to Bed was announced to him, he burst into a violent fit of Rage,
was oblig'd to be carried there, and shew'd as much resistance as we have seen in any part of his illness —

His Majesty did not sleep till three o'clock in the morning, but spoke a great deal in his usual irrational manner & with great earnestness — Since three he has slept three hours & a half — This morning His Majesty received us partly in anger & partly in apparent good Humour - There was a great deal of wrong in his conversation, but he related an anecdote about Lord Trawly with some humour - Upon this however neither Dr Willis nor Dr Baillie place any value, as it does not indicate any more probable approach to a sane state of Mind —

Windsor Castle
Oct 21 - 1811

Sir,

I have the honor to acquaint your Royal Highness that His Majesty pass'd the last day with some marks of irritability, but without any thing particular to distinguish it. In the evening His Majesty slept between four & five hours in his chair. His Majesty went to bed without difficulty; but has pass'd a disturbed night, during which he has had no sleep, and he appears to be in an irritable state this morning.

I have the honor to be
 Sir, your Royal Highness's
 most obedient

Shumble servant

Windsor Castle

22 Oct. 1811

W. Hurd

[Faint, illegible handwriting on lined paper]

meo/16/8/26

Sir,

His Majesty pass'd the whole of yesterday under a great degree of excitement and irritation, which however did not induce the necessity of restraint, as it shew'd itself rather in loudness & vehemence of talking, than in any bodily exertions. His Majesty went to bed without difficulty. He slept four hours in the night, and appears to be this morning free from that excess of irritability which had distinguish'd the preceding day.

I have the honor to be

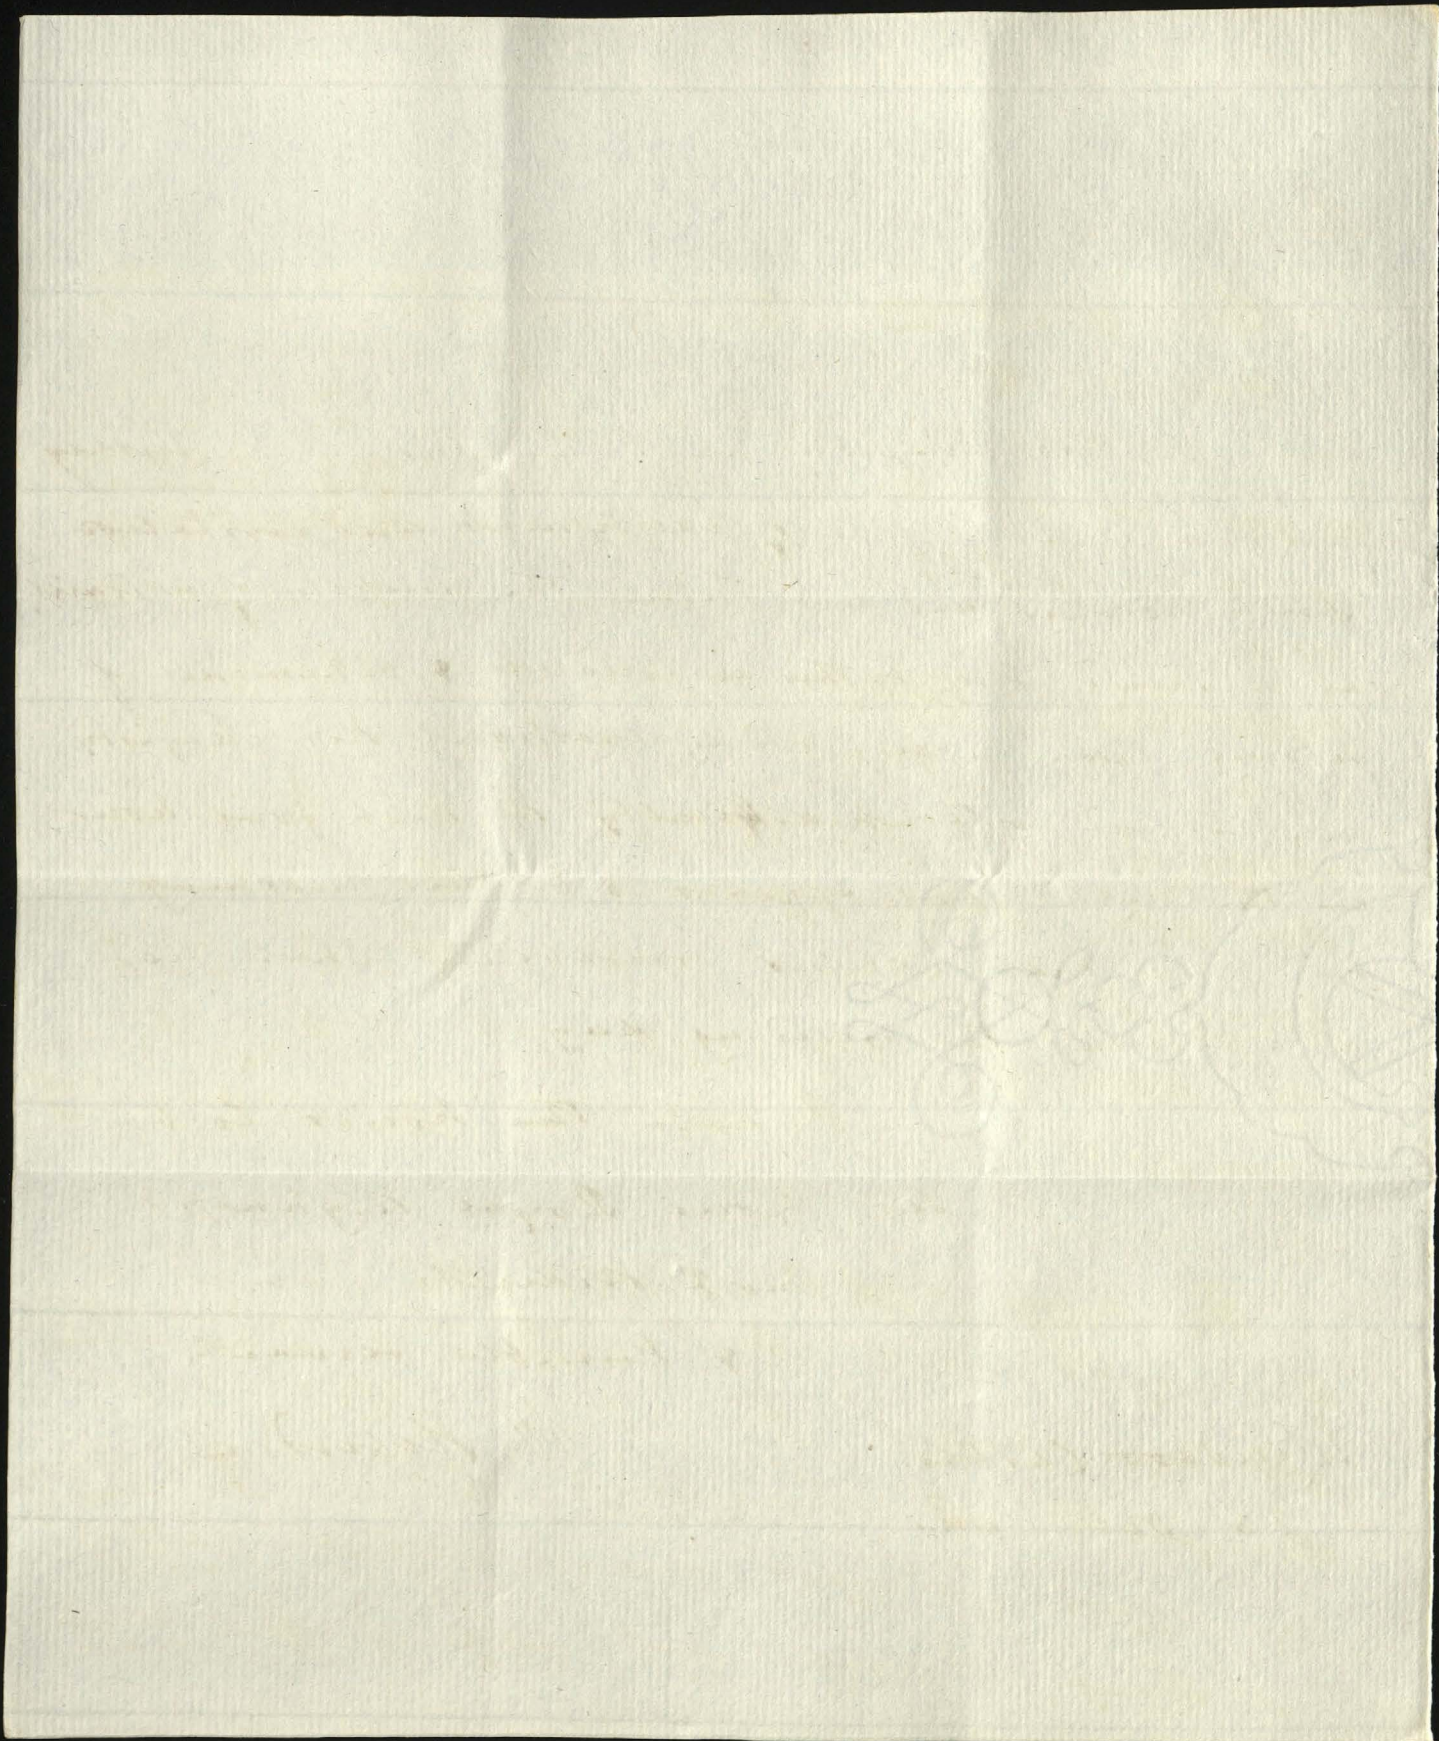

Sir, Your Royal Highness's
most obedient

& humble servant

Windsor Castle

23 Oct. 1821

W. Hervey

Oct 25 1811 Meo/16/3/27

Sir

I have watched His Majesty with great attention for the last twenty four hours having had the opportunity of sitting up last night, and I am convinced that not only is His Majesty's state of mind not improved, but the condition of the King's general health not so good as it was a fortnight ago. The bursts of passion were most frequent yesterday, and in the short intervals of peace and silence His Majesty betrayed in His countenance the most marked irritation by which His frame was vexed. At dinner time His Majesty ate but little - having thrown away with great profusion at least half his food - Before eight o'clock it became again a question whether the Restaurant should be imposed, or to avoid this objection the King should go to bed - His Majesty went to bed, and slept about two hours and a half before midnight - Since that time the King has been under constant Restraint till past seven in the morning - and was more tired and sickened throughout the night than I have ever observed His Majesty to be before when I have sat up -

Repeated attempts were made at an interview this morning to obtain information from His Majesty of His feelings, and His condition - but every question was answered by an imprecation - and we learnt nothing, in fact, but what was obvious from the King's external appearance. His Majesty looked pale - but perhaps it was the paleness of a very warm man of exhaustion - tho' it can hardly be doubted that such an intense excitement must have worn the frame considerably.

I am, Sir, most respectfully, your Royal Highness's
faithful servant

Henry Balfour

Oct: 25. 1811.

Windsor Castle

Oct. 26. 1811 MED/16/3/28

10

The consulting Physicians have been very fortunate in the time of their visit again - as the King has been more quiet within the last twenty hours than we have seen His Majesty for a fortnight. His Majesty was sleepy, excited, & thro' the almost the whole afternoon and evening - and appeared quite subdued and worn down by the excessive exertion which had prevailed so long. The King went to bed quietly, and has slept six hours - but soon after His Majesty awoke, the Restrainer was absolutely necessary for two hours and in that state, the same kind of cleanliness was shown by His Majesty which I have had occasion to notice so frequently lately. At our interview this morning the Physicians were reunited with good humour, and His Majesty attended for an instant but he was said by them scarcely, but he took no interest in any thing they communicated, and appeared intent upon some arrangements. He made in expectation of a calamity which was to befall the nation next Monday or Monday - or something of that kind.

I am Sir, with the highest respect Your Royal Highness faithful

Servant

Henry Halifax

Oct: 26. 1811.

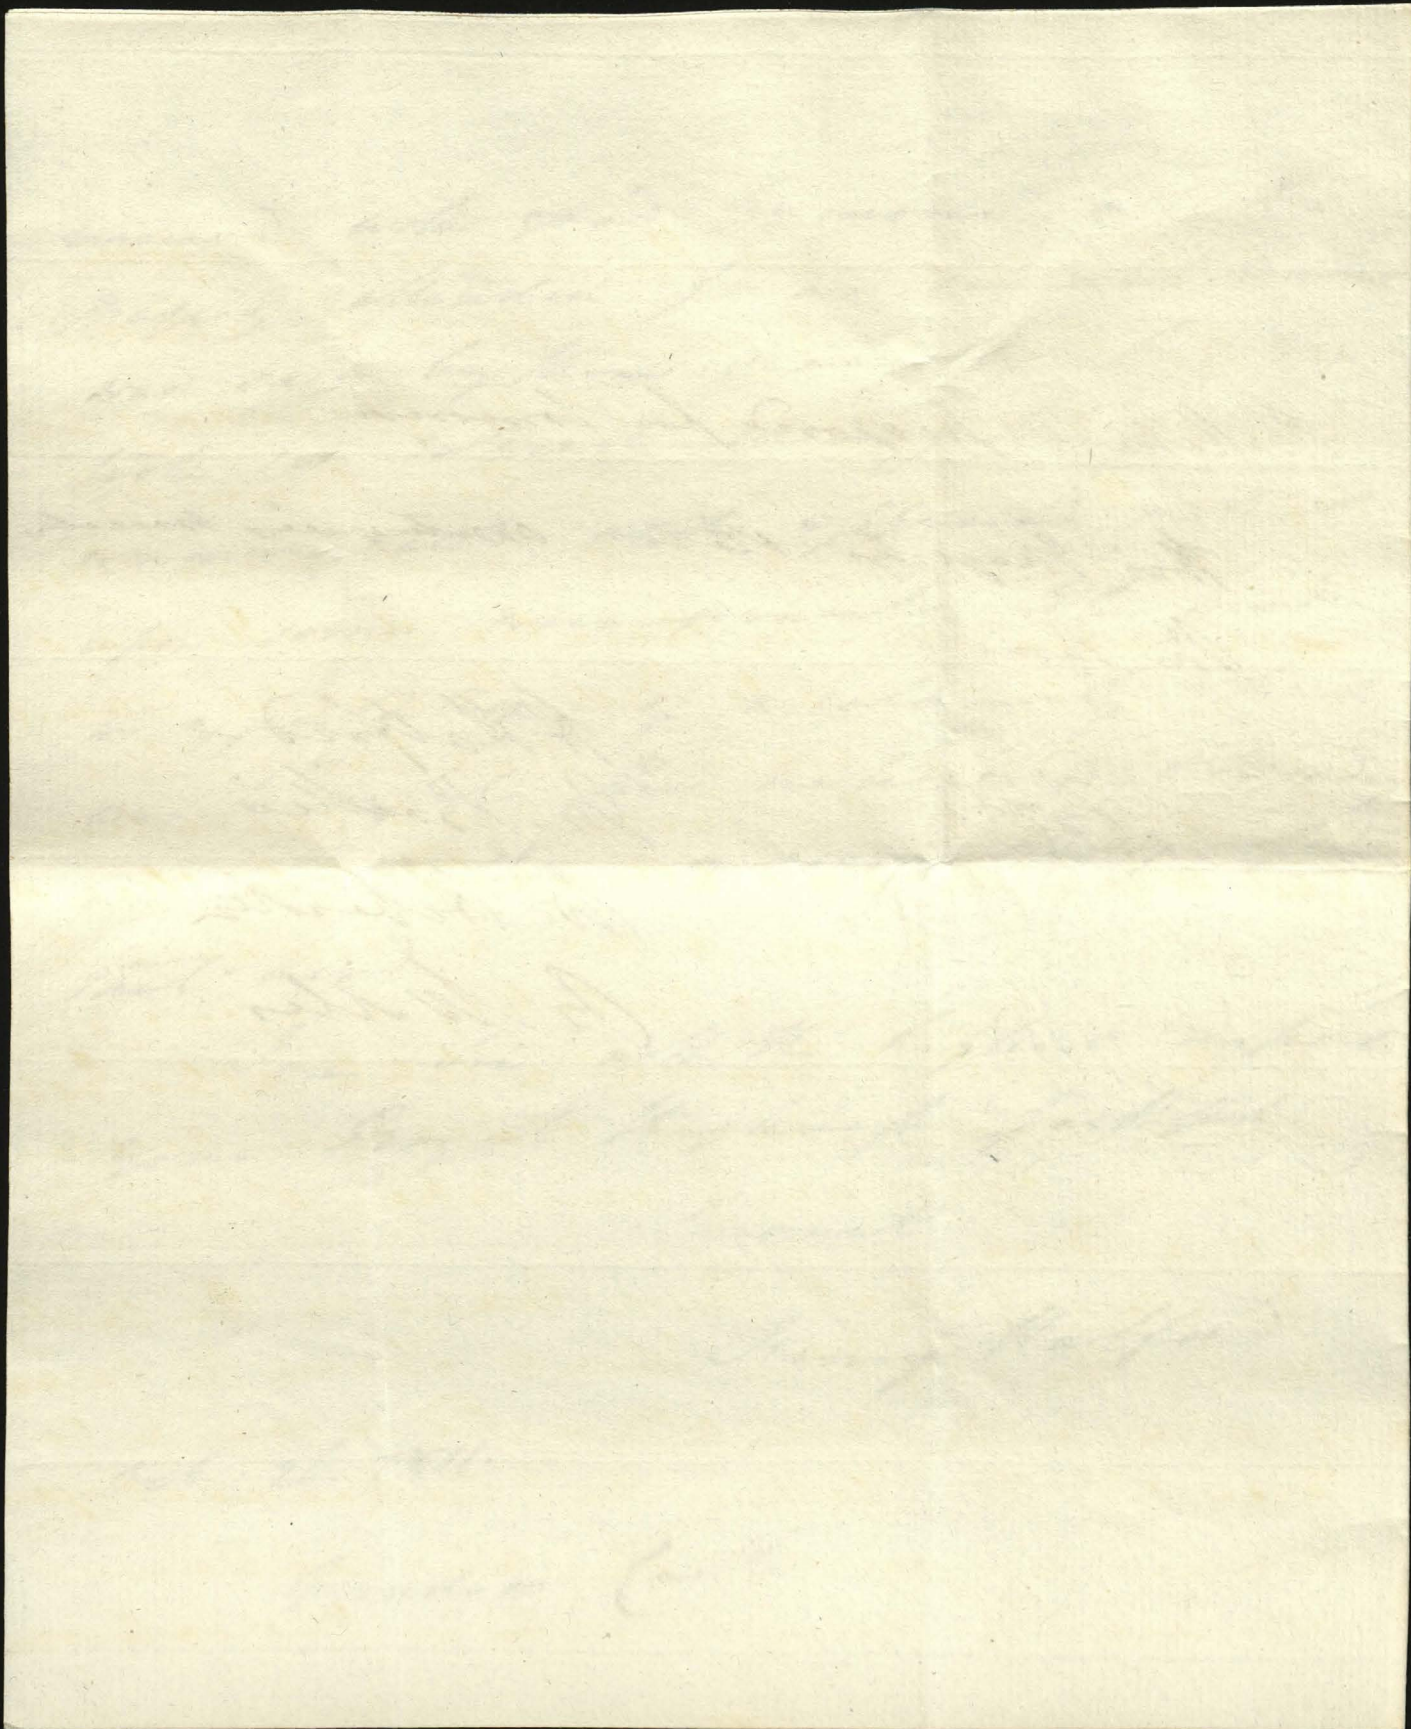

Windsor Castle

Bulletin - proposed for tomorrow -

His Majesty's State continues much the same -

Signed.

A. Halford
Dr. Baillie
W. Herbert
R. Willis

2nd Oct 27. 1811 MED/16/3/29

Sir,

That & severe intermittency which has characterized the King's state for several days past continues - and we found His Majesty about usual visit this morning, again not to be approached with a prospect of obtaining any information of His Majesty's symptoms. ~~That~~ ^{but} what was obvious from His outward appearance. This extraordinary proneness to excitement has been accompanied within the last twenty four hours with delirium - and His Majesty did not eat either His breakfast or His dinner yesterday with His usual appetite.

The King slept about two hours in the night, and that with an interruption; and manifested the same determined disregard to cleanliness which His Majesty has shown almost every night lately.

I think I need not add to this usage.

-orable report an opinion that His Majesty's state of mind has not appeared & improved in the smallest degree.

I am, Sir, most respectfully

Your Royal Highness's

Faithful Servant

Henry Balfour.

P.S. I have received a note from the Archbishop of Canterbury this morning purporting that the order of the 19th respecting the visits of the Consulting Phys^{ns}: being made separately, is revoked - and that they are to visit only conjointly.

ME0/16/3/30

Dr Baillie has the honour of informing the Prince-Regent that His Majesty was in a very quiet state yesterday till six in the evening - He then threw off His Wig and Neckcloth, and when these were replaced, He threaten'd, if He was not permitted to go to Bed, He would commit a great offence against Cleanliness - He very soon put this Threat into execution and when He was attempted to be clean'd His Majesty made so much resistance that Restraint became absolutely necessary -

He then wetted Himself a little after Eight which made a change of Linen necessary and this opportunity was taken of his being put to Bed -

His Majesty slept three hours in the early part of the Night - about Three He became so intractable, and attempted so much to throw off the Clothes, that Confinement again became necessary - This was continued till nearly seven O'clock - Our interview

This morning was short, but His Majesty shewed very strongly the disordered impressions of His Mind —

Windsor Castle

Oct 27 - 1811

Oct. 28. 1811

MSB.16.3.31

Dr Baillie has the honour of informing the Prince-Regent that His Majesty ^{performed} yesterday, except at the time of going to Bed, very quietly — He sometimes played upon His Harpsichord, He was often silent, and He sometimes spoke for a little while His conversation related chiefly to an Inundation which was to drown this Country and from which He was preparing to escape to Denmark —

His Majesty slept a good deal in the Evening and it was expected that He would have gone to Bed without reluctance — This however was not the case — His Majesty got into a violent passion when the hour of Bed was announced to Him, and He was obliged to be carried to His Bedroom & undressed by force —

His Majesty slept on the whole three hours & an half in the night — When He awoke He became turbulent & intractable so that confinement became necessary for between two and three hours — His Majesty willed his bed intentionally early in the morning — Our Interview this morning was short, as His Majesty shewed that He wish'd it to be over.

His conversation related chiefly to the Inundation, and to the tumbling down of St George's Hall, which He thinks has taken place

Windsor castle

Oct 20 - 1711

MSO/16/2/32

Windsor Castle Oct. 29

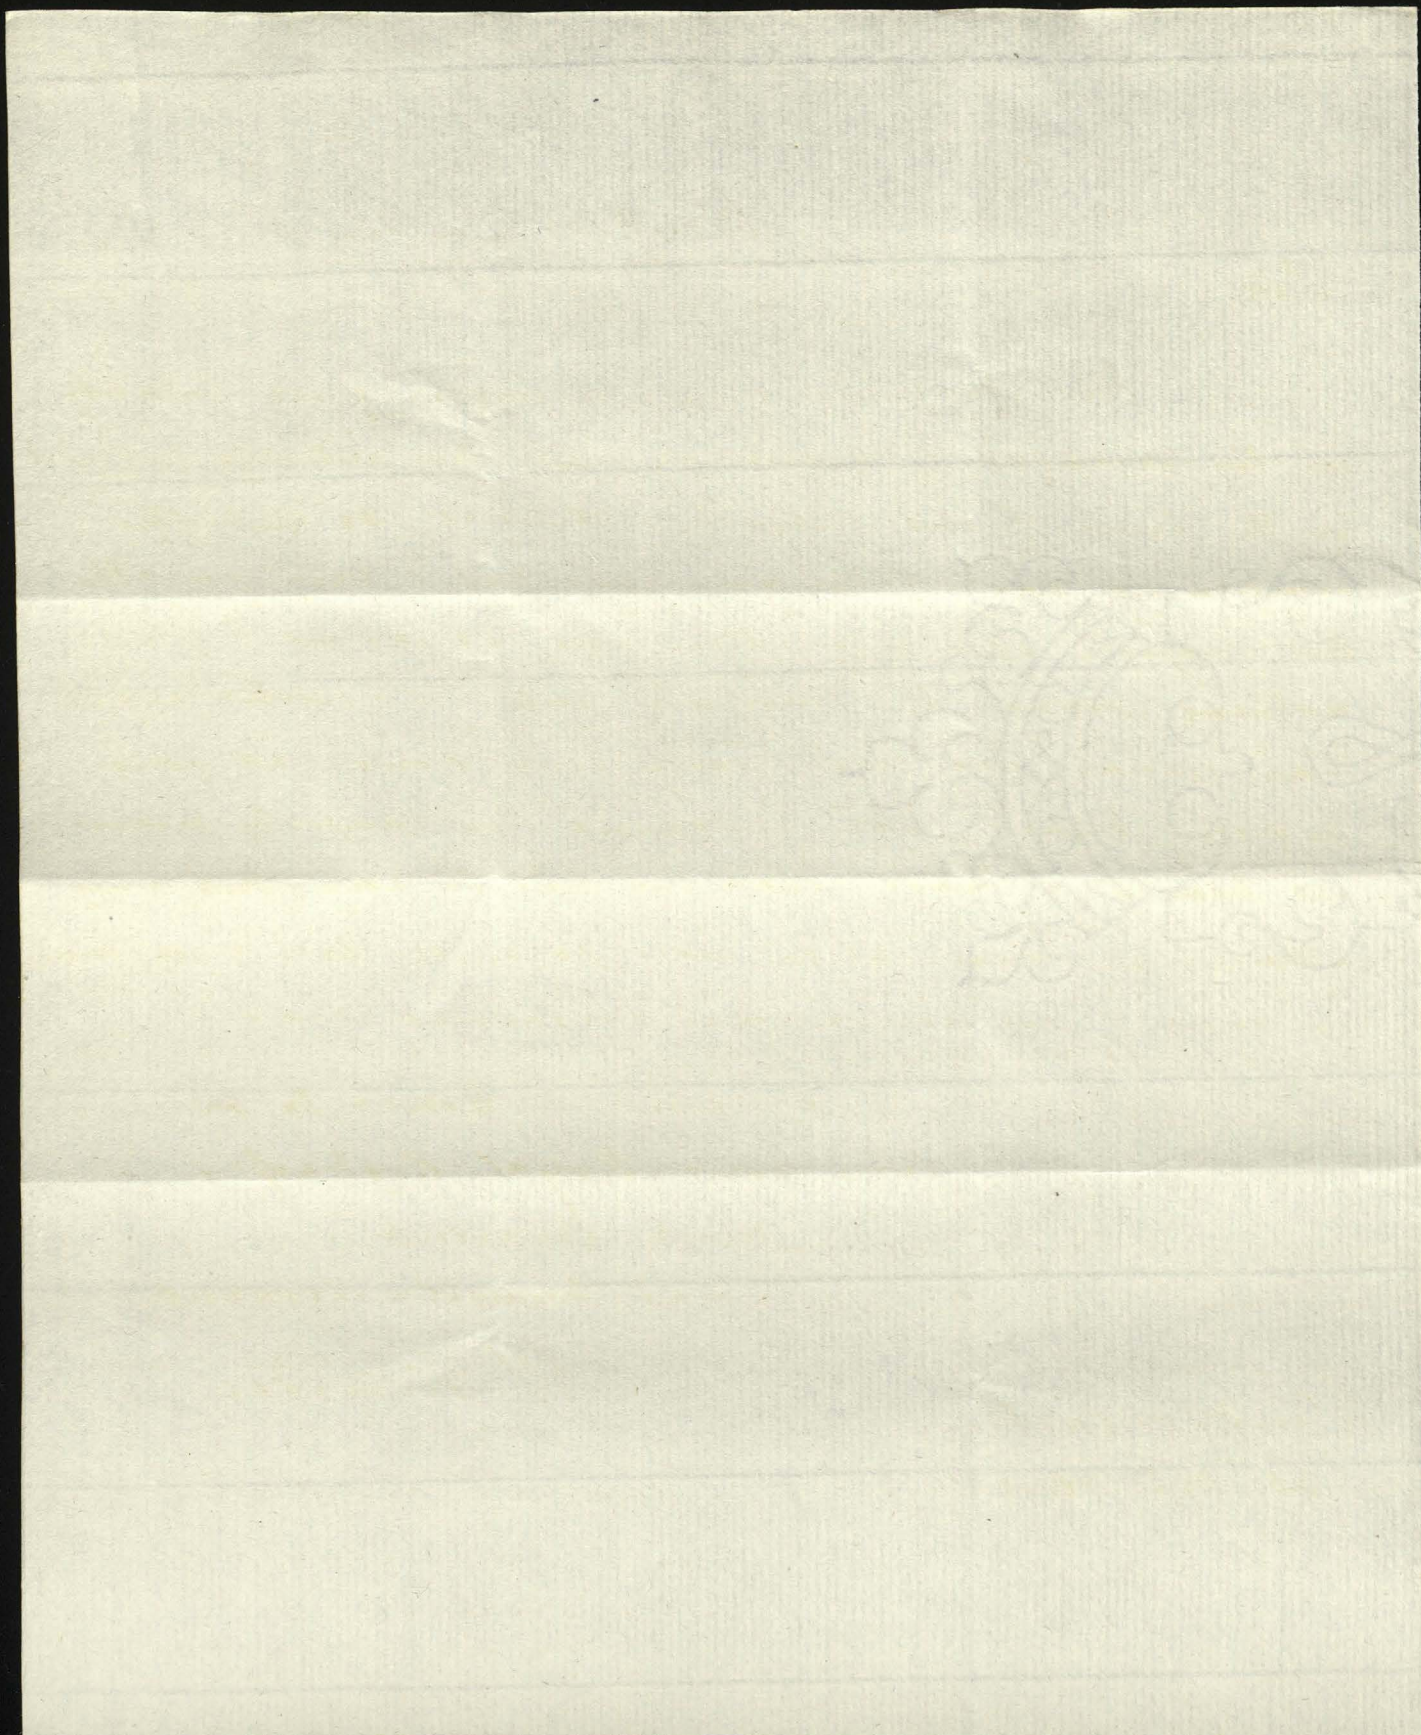

Sir,

I have the honor to inform your Royal Highness that the state of quiet, which had been observed in His Majesty since Friday last, has continued to at least as great a degree through yesterday. His Majesty talked less, and was more occupied with his harpsichord, than he had been for some time past. In the evening His Majesty asked to walk about his room, which he did in a very proper manner, though for a very short time. His Majesty slept in his chair about an hour and half. He went to bed quietly; but did not sleep more than two hours and a half in the night. His Majesty afterwards became restless, & was obliged to be confined. Nothing particular has distinguished this morning. His Majesty appeared more irritable than for some few days past, though less so than during the week preceding. The general character of his disorder is little altered.

I have the honor to be

Sir, Your Royal Highness's
most obedient
humble servant

W. Herberden

meo/16/3/33

Sir,

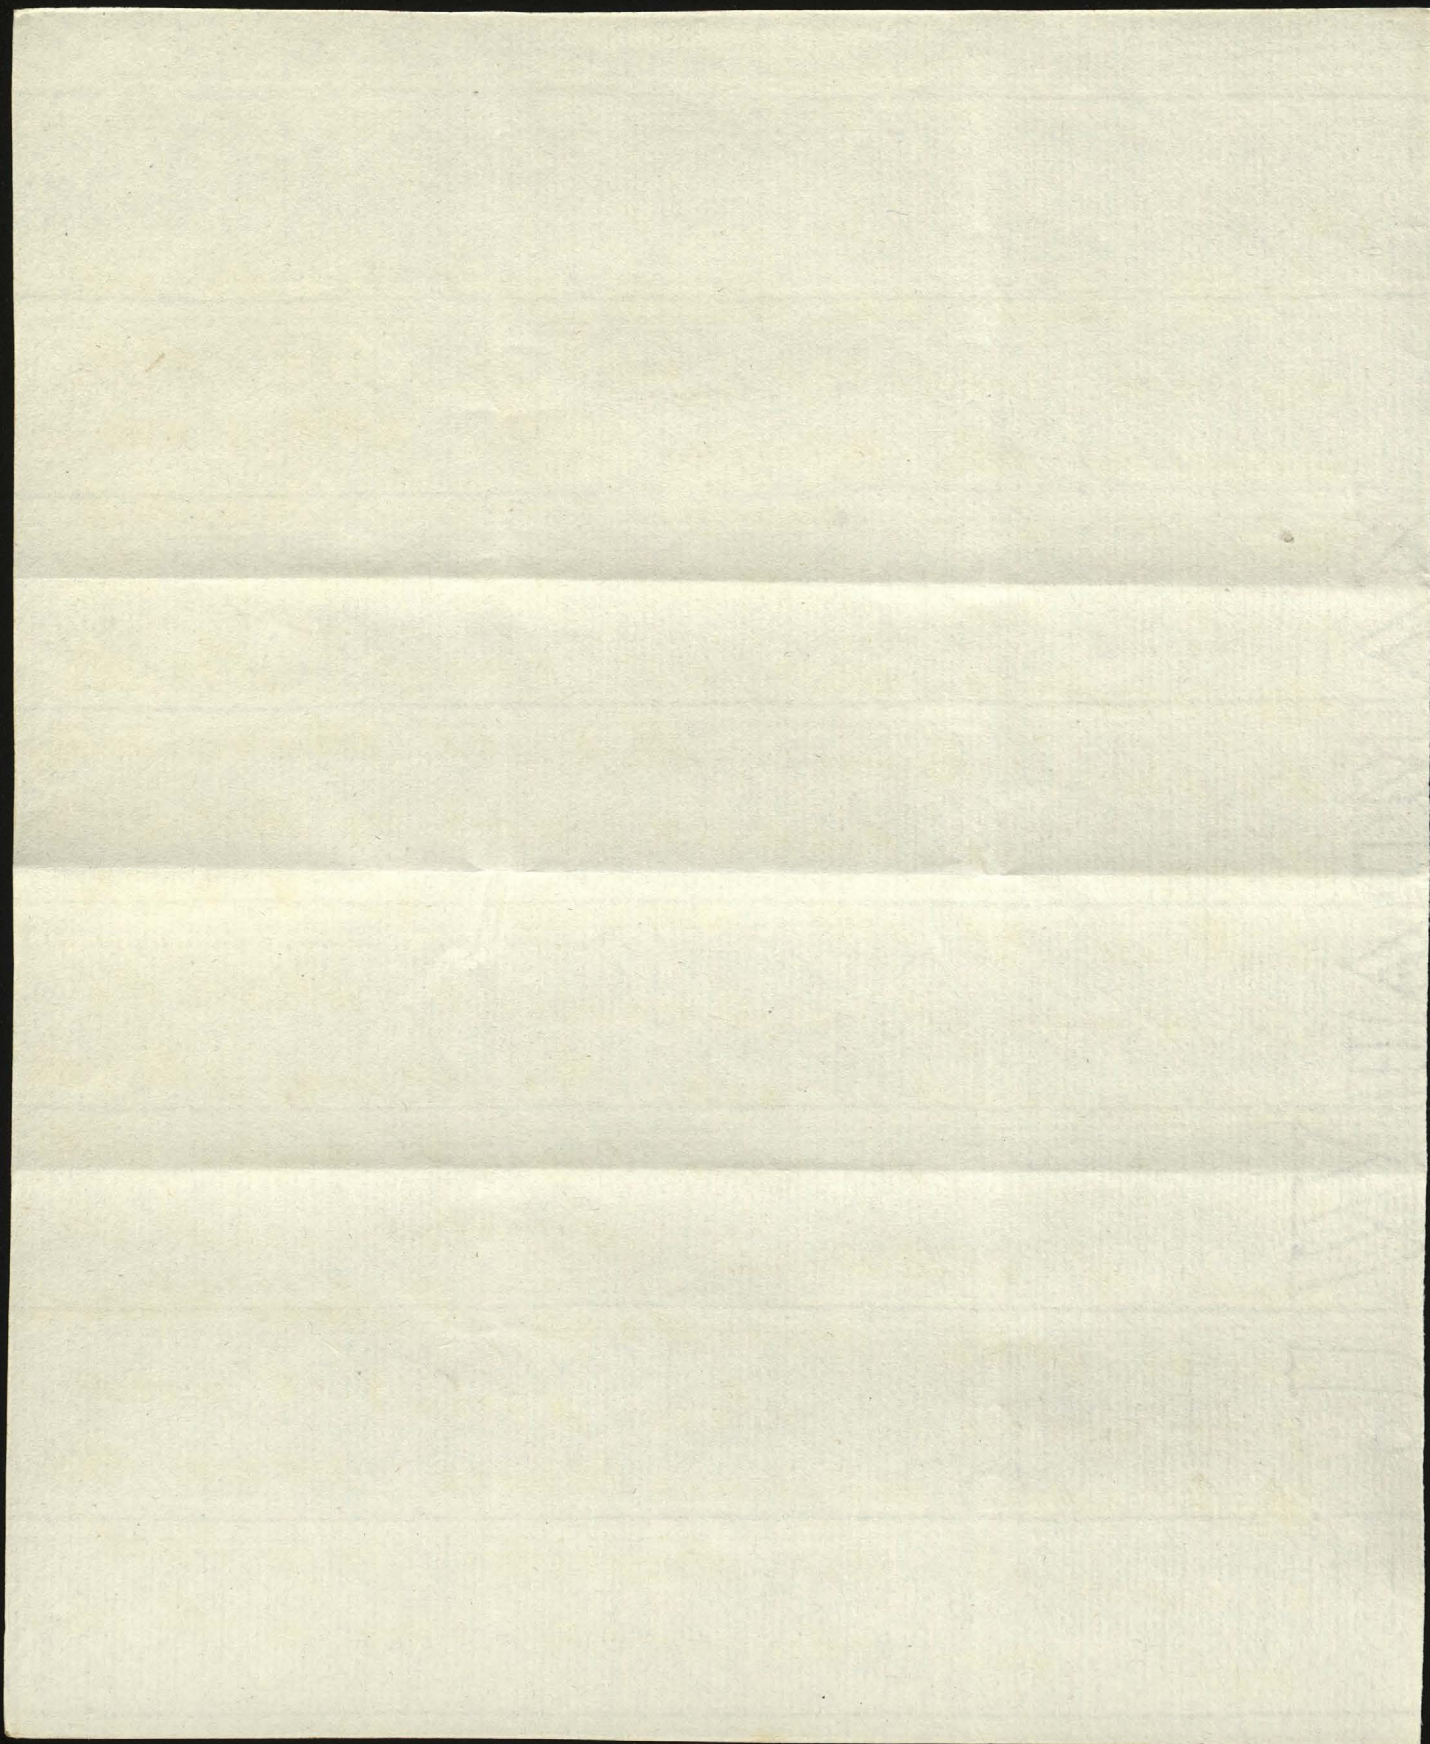

His Majesty showed a degree of irritability in the forenoon of yesterday; but this entirely subsided by the time of His Majesty's dinner, so that the remaining part of the day was passed very quietly. His Majesty said very little, and, so far as I know, nothing wrong. His Majesty passed a quieter night than usual, and slept nearly five hours at four different times. This morning His Majesty received us kindly, & heard what we had to say; but any attempt at conversation was presently lost & confounded in some of his preconceived erroneous ideas -

I have the honor to be
Sir, Your Royal Highness's
most obedient
and humble servant

W. Herberder

Windsor Castle

30 Oct. 1821

Oct. 31. 1811 MS. A. 16. 3. 34

Sir

The King was heavy and sleepy all day long yesterday - and in fact did sleep in the course of the afternoon almost four hours - His Majesty went to bed without reluctance, and lay composed and still enough for the two first hours - but at eleven o'clock became so violent and so determined to throw off all covering as to render the means of confinement absolutely indispensable - and this it was attempted four several times in the course of the night, to withdraw the Restraint, it was as often necessary to have recourse to it again. I am grieved to add that some circumstances which have distinguished His Majesty's very bad nights, were observable also in the last.

His Majesty received us this morning in good humour, and a part of his conversation was in stuff not incoherent, but the King soon discovered the unreasonable notions by which His Majesty's mind is occupied, and terminated our interview by a remark that one of the Princes had been executed yesterday, and that he had but one son left.

I am, Sir, most respectfully
Your Royal Highness

Faithful servant

Henry Balfour

Windsor Castle

Oct: 31. 1811.